Editor's Column

The Year in Review

Following September's Pro Tour–Atlanta event, the first stop on Wizards of the Coast's 1996-97 Pro Tour schedule, I thought it might be an appropriate time to look back at WotC's inaugural season: its highlights, hard-fought battles, and individual champions.

• Pro Tour–New York (Feb. 17–18, 1996): Despite a raging blizzard in NYC, WotC's very first Magic professional tournament kicked off inside Manhattan's Puck Building with a total of 347 participants (239 Master-division players and 108 Juniors), representing fourteen different countries. In the Type II Master-division finals, a seasoned Frenchman, 25-year-old Bertrand Lestrée, faced Michael Loconto, a relative unknown out of Grafton, MA. In the end, "Loco," the 26-year-old social worker, outlasted Lestrée and walked away with top honors. They each earned $8,500.

In the Junior division ranks, a pair of 17-year-olds—Graham Tatomer of Santa Barbara, CA, and Aaron Kline of East Windsor, NJ—met to decide the title. In a best-of-five-games match, Tatomer topped Kline, 3–2. For his efforts, Tatomer was awarded a $12,000 college scholarship; Kline a $5,000 scholarship.

• Pro Tour–Long Beach (May 3–5, 1996): In severe contrast to NYC's blinding snowstorm, 80-degree southern California sun greeted all Magic fanatics who played aboard the permanently-docked Queen Mary ocean-liner in Long Beach. Some 281 players from thirteen different countries converged to battle one another in a difficult Booster-Draft tournament. When the dust had settled, a pair of New Hampshire rivals—27-year-old Shawn "Hammer" Regnier and Tom Guevin, 22—found themselves squaring off in the Master finals. Hammer, a former pro arm wrestler, outmuscled Guevin, a software engineer, in a down-to-the-wire, five-game tussle. Hammer earned $17,000; Guevin $10,000.

In the Junior finals, Max Szlagor, a 17-year-old from Schaumburg, IL, swept 18-year-old Paul McCabe of Toronto, Canada, in three straight games. Szlagor walked away with $8,400 in scholarship winnings, McCabe $5,000.

• Pro Tour–Columbus (July 4–7, 1996): With Fourth of July fireworks providing a colorful backdrop, several hundred Magic players went head-to-head inside the Greater Columbus (Ohio) Convention Center. The format consisted of Ice Age/Alliances constructed deck, and a 17-year-old Swede named Olle Råde surprised everyone by overwhelming his competition. Råde, a student, defeated 26-year-old Bronx, New York, native Sean Fleischman in the finals, 3–1. Råde scored a $22,000 payday for his heroics, while Fleischman went home with $12,800.

In the Junior bracket, spectators witnessed an all-Canadian final. Long Beach runner-up Paul McCabe locked horns with fellow 18-year-old countryman Terry Borer. Borer pulled out a 3–2 decision—and $8,400 in scholarship earnings. McCabe scored his second $5,000 scholarship.

• Magic World Championships (August 14–18, 1996): The final stop on WotC's inaugural Pro Tour season saw 125 top-notch players from 28 nations arrive at company headquarters. After battling through preliminary rounds of Booster Draft, Type II, and Type 1.5 play, eight top dogs emerged. But to everyone's surprise, the eventual champion was neither Pro Tour "Player of the Year" Olle Råde, nor perennial top-gun Mark Justice of Salt Lake City. Instead, it was little-known, 19-year-old Tom Chanpheng of Brisbane, Australia. A Magic player only since April of '95, Chanpheng's white-weenie deck steamrolled Justice's red-black Necrodeck in the finals, 3-0. Chanpheng's winnings: $26,000. Justice's take: $16,000.

Four different events, four different Master-division champions, three different Junior titlists, and momentum that just won't quit. Not bad for a debut season.

FOR THE RECORD

Since the last issue of The Duelist Sideboard went out, we've received our fair share of inquiries from readers asking if 1996 Magic World Champion Tom Chanpheng's Standard (Type II) deck, listed at just fifty-seven cards, was used illegally at the Worlds. The answer is: no. Chanpheng used a sixty-card deck. The problem was that we listed only one Order of Leitbur in his decklist when the actual count was four Orders of Leitbur. Sorry about the error. For cleanup purposes, here's the correct tally on Chanpheng's Standard deck:

Main Deck

1 Armageddon
1 Balance
4 Disenchant
1 Kjeldoran Outpost
1 Land Tax
1 Lodestone Bauble
4 Mishra's Factory
1 Order of Leitbur
4 Order of the White Shield
2 Phyrexian War Beast
1 Reinforcements
1 Reprisal
4 Savannah Lions
2 Serra Angel
1 Sleight of Mind
4 Strip Mine
4 Swords to Plowshares
4 White Knight
1 Zuran Orb
15 Plains

Sideboard

2 Arenson's Aura
1 Black Vise
4 Divine Offering
1 Energy Storm
1 Exile
1 Kjeldoran Outpost
1 Reprisal
2 Serrated Arrows
1 Sleight of Mind
1 Spirit Link

HOW DO I SUBSCRIBE?

Dear Duelist Sideboard:

I just saw the new Duelist Sideboard—the first one that didn't come polybagged with The Duelist—and I must say I am impressed! It was very well written and, unlike The Duelist, had a lot of meat to it, not just sauce. I'm not trying to knock The Duelist, but I spent a few hours reading through the Sideboard and spent only a few minutes looking at the pretty pictures in The Duelist. The Sideboard had tons of great articles to read!

I currently have a subscription to The Duelist, but instead of renewing it, I'd like to pick up a subscription to The Duelist Sideboard. All of this information and at one-third the price of The Duelist! Keep up the great work.

There was one little problem, however. The typo-gremlins must have struck because in the article that appears on pages 30 and 31—"The Worlds vs. Pro Tour"—I'm identified as Eric Radonjic. I guess I'll just have to do well in Dallas to make up for my poor showing in Atlanta and let everyone know that my name is Peter Radonjic. Oh well, thanks for listening.

the name's...Peter

Dear Duelist Sideboard:

Because it's so difficult to find your fine magazine (the nearest Arena League site to my house is at least four hours away), I would like to be able to subscribe to your magazine. Can you help me out with the proper information?

Kevin Johnson
Harwood, Indiana

To readers of The Duelist Sideboard,

Your response to The Duelist Sideboard has been tremendous! Thank you for your comments. Recently, myself and others on The Duelist staff have had to make some difficult decisions regarding how we distribute The Duelist Sideboard.

You may recall that when The Duelist originally launched The Duelist Sideboard project, the magazine was just sixteen pages deep, then jumped to thirty-two pages in length. It didn't take long for that to change, as we soon realized the publication had too much to say and not enough space in which to say it. In August, The Duelist Sideboard expanded to sixty-four pages to accommodate all the interesting editorial content. At this larger size, it became apparent that polybagging The Duelist Sideboard with The Duelist was no longer a cost-effective practice.

We'd like you to know that the current system of shipping The Duelist Sideboard to Arena League retailers and retailers holding DCI-sanctioned tournaments is only a test. Today, the Arena League boasts four hundred sites around the country, and by January that number is expected to double, and keep growing in the months ahead. We'll be evaluating The Duelist Sideboard's effectiveness after a few issues to determine the following: 1) do players and readers find it valuable?; 2) should The Duelist make The Duelist Sideboard available to all retailers?; and 3) are players and readers willing to subscribe to the magazine?

We apologize for any inconvenience this interim measure may have caused. For those of you who would like a copy of The Duelist Sideboard while we survey, test, and evaluate the possibility of offering subscriptions and expanding distribution to include non-Arena-participating retailers, we are now offering individual copies for sale directly from our offices here in Renton, Washington. U.S. residents please send $3.20 ($1.95, plus $1.25 for shipping and handling) to The Duelist Sideboard, P.O. Box 707, Renton WA, 98057. Canadian and Mexican residents should send $4 in U.S. funds ($1.95 + $2.05 s/h), and all other foreign residents should send $6.45 ($1.95 + $4.50 s/h). You can send in MasterCard, Visa, or Discover card information, or a check drawn from a U.S. bank account, or a U.S. draft from a foreign bank; please specify "U.S. FUNDS" and make the check payable to "Duelist Merchandise." Any questions can be directed to Associate Editor Scott McGough at FinkBird@wizards.com .

thanks again!

Paradise Found

Getting the Most out of Your First Pro Tour Event

by Melody Alder

...he was duly impressed. "Wotc's really putting on a show," he said grinning.

kay, so you play Magic every weekend with your friends. You trade, you collect, and you generally think Magic players are cool. You've read about the Pro Tour in The Duelist Sideboard and other magazines, and you even recognize some players' names. You've thought about being a spectator at one of the Pro Tour events, but maybe you're a little bit intimidated by the enormity of the occasion.

It's not like going to a baseball game, after all. You can't just get your peanuts and cracker jacks, find your seat, and stand up when the wave comes your way. To get the most out of the Pro Tour, you have to know where to go and you have to know what's available. I attended a Pro Tour event for the first time in Atlanta, and having done it once, I feel like I'm ready to show you the ropes.

Once you pay your $5 general admission fee, you're in a Magic lover's heaven, and you even get a program book to this paradise to show you what's happening where and when. The first day at the Atlanta event started the Mirage Sealed-Deck tournament, and though it was exciting to watch all the players' reactions to the never-before-seen Mirage cards, you probably don't want to stay in the same place for hours watching the tournament. The same goes for the second day's Team Event.

Artist Mark Tedin signs for the fans.

But there were plenty of other things to do. Spectators could participate in Standard (Type II) non-sanctioned tournaments, Standard sanctioned tournaments, a Pro Tour Collector Set tournament, Ice Age/Alliances Constructed or Sealed-Deck tournaments, a Chinese Fourth Edition Sealed-Deck tournament, a Classic (Type I) tournament, and many, many more. In fact, new tournaments started every hour. For the Sealed-Deck tournaments, once you pay for your cards (which you get to keep), you're in. Most of the other tournaments have a $4 to $6 registration fee. Magic trivia lovers could even participate in a Magic game show, hosted by Wizards of the Coast's own Mark Rosewater. And if you (heaven forbid) get tired of Magic, you could participate in live RoboRally, strive to become the Great Dalmuti, or learn or play Netrunner and Vampire: The Eternal Struggle. Prizes were awarded for all of these events, ranging from Magic cards to promo cards to T-shirts.

The before-mentioned guide to Magic heaven, however, doesn't cover all of the subtleties of this grand event. You might not know, for example, that Richard Garfield was wandering the scene, chatting with people, and answering questions. You could also get your cards signed by Magic artists. Atlanta's event brought out Scott Kirschner, Mark Tedin, and Doug Gregory, three men who are not only very talented illustrators, but also quite amiable. Kirschner expressed his pleasure at meeting the people who play Magic: "I mean, they're the ones who keep me working," he said, smiling. Just beyond the artists' table, you could find an artists' gallery, featuring the art of Richard Kane Ferguson, Kaja Foglio, and Phil Foglio.

You also might not know that you could find a Magic game going on somewhere, at any time, day or night. In Atlanta, you'd have been sure to see Pro Tour competitors and spectators playing Magic in the hotel lobbies, in the restaurants, just about anywhere that had a floor or a table. If you wandered the lobby of the hotel at 3 A.M., you might have been fooled into thinking it was broad daylight out, since none of the Pro Tour players seemed to be sleeping.

And besides all this constant playing, there was trading—trading not just at the table that was set up especially for that purpose, but also on the floors, at all the tables, and in the hallways. Several people brought their entire Magic collections just to trade, so if you were looking for a certain card, you were almost sure to find it.

Artist Scott Kirschner

But wait, there's more. (How much would you pay for this much pleasure?) If you felt like playing in the limited environment, no problem. One of the first things you encountered when you walked in was a merchandise booth that sold everything from Magic cards to The Duelist to Mirage T-shirts. Feeling those hunger pains, but you don't want to leave the scene where all the action's going on? Stroll on over to the Dominia Diner and fill up on deli food. Want to see what the heck is wrong with your deck? Find one of the deck doctors and have it diagnosed. And if you felt the need to test your skills against a WotC employee, well, that's what the gunslinging table was for.

Now back to the main event. The Mirage Sealed-Deck tournament began on Friday morning and ended late that evening. Saturday was the Team Event, which was also fun to watch, but as mentioned above, there were plenty of other events in which to participate. Sunday was the day of the quarterfinalists, and for this, WotC went all out. Spectators could see and hear exactly what was going on during these last important games via video monitors and voice-over commentary provided by Mark Rosewater and Mike Elliott of the Magic Research and Development team, plus none other than the colorful Shawn "Hammer" Regnier, who, by the way, has an unexpectedly soft-spoken voice for someone who looks so intimidating. The camera was positioned in such a way as to give a bird's-eye view of the playing field so you could see the whole game, but it also focused on the player's hands, so you could see what they were holding, and on their faces, so you could see their usually calm, cool expressions. Combined with being able to hear the players speak and the voice-over commentary, spectators knew exactly what was going on at all times.

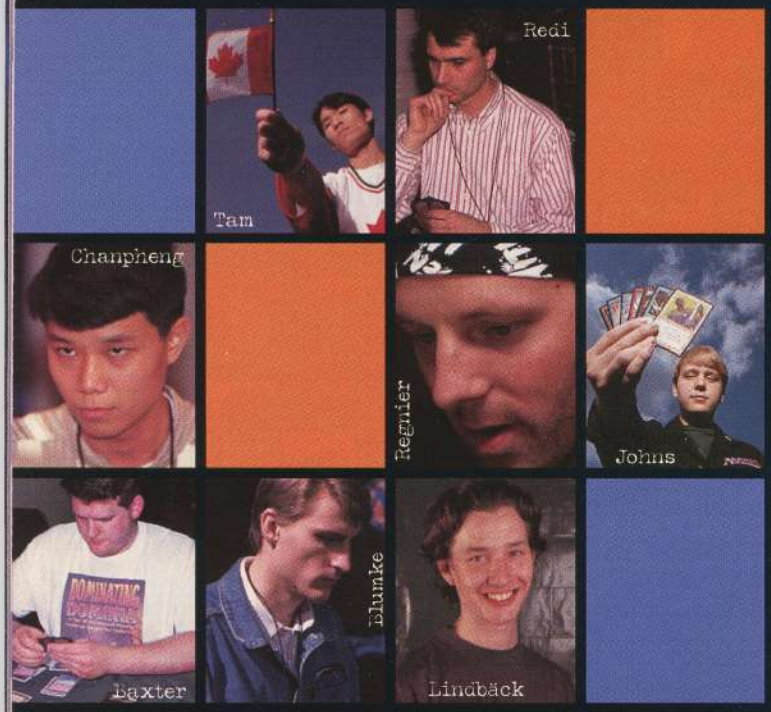
Watching the game in this way was not unlike watching a sports event on television. And since there were dozens and dozens of people sitting around the several monitors, the audience had the kind of camaraderie that I've only experienced in front of the TV set on Super Bowl Sunday. During the third game of a semifinal match between Darwin Kastle and Terry Borer, Kastle was waiting for a swamp to show up throughout most of the game. If he got the swamp, he'd win. If he didn't, he'd lose for sure the next turn. When he finally drew the swamp, the audience shouted so loud (whether out of gratitude or of dismay or both) that we were later told to "pipe down" because the Pro Tour players three floors above us could hear us.

So hopefully you're able to envision what a great gathering this Pro Tour circuit is. But just in case you don't want to take my word for it, I also spoke with several other people who were experiencing a professional tournament for the first time, whether as a spectator or player.

This was Atlanta resident Ray Bornet's first time at a professional tournament, and he was duly impressed. "WotC's really putting on a show," he said grinning. "My son Ben is playing in the Juniors, and he thinks he's in hog heaven." Twenty-six-year-old David VanOotegham from Mishwaka, Indiana, was playing in the Pro Tour for the first time (and almost made it into the Top 64) and had his own take on the action. "I don't see 'the grind' that everyone talks about; I feel very comfortable playing in this environment. I got to pick the brain of [George] Baxter; he was very approachable and I was able to pick up tips by watching other players."

Despite having had three intense days of virtually nonstop Magic, plus lots of food, drink, and great company right in front of us, we still heard random bits of conversation involving Crashes of Rhinos and Merfolk Seers and observed all those lovely tables covered with—you guessed it—Magic cards. What a great game!

The audience had the kind of camaraderie that I've only experienced in front of the TV set on Super Bowl Sunday.



Major League Baseball has its Mid-Summer Classic, the NFL celebrates its Pro Bowl, and the NBA presents its annual All-Star Game every February. Now Magic: The Gathering joins the loop.

The first annual Duelist Invitational, the premier event for sixteen of Magic's best players, kicks off February 14 through 16, in Hong Kong! This is the tournament where the best of the best will be gathered for three days to battle in various play formats, putting contestants to the ultimate test of strategy and endurance. In fifteen rounds, each player will have the opportunity to be matched up against every other invitee. The two players with the best record meet for a final round to see who will walk away the champion.

The grand prize for the victor is a very special honor. He will be able to work with members of Wizards of the Coast's Magic Research & Development team to design his very own Magic card. This will include not only creating the casting cost and abilities of the card, but also helping with the name, flavor text, and art description.

The Duelist Invitational Tournament

compiled by Terry Melia and Scott McGough

The sixteen participants in this first annual event were selected by their peers at the 1996 Magic World Championships, and by a panel of judges. Each player had to place in at least one of these three categories:

1) Finished in the Top 64 at any Pro Tour event;

2) Be a member of one of the national teams competing at the 1996 World Championships; or

3) Rank in the Top 25 of the Classic (Type I), Standard (Type II), or Limited (Sealed Deck) DCI lists at the time the results from the '96 World Championships were announced.

The players' names and description of each one's accomplishments were put on ballots and handed out to every competitor at the World Championships. Each voter was asked to pick sixteen names. The results were tabulated and the top thirty-two names were passed to a special panel, hand-picked by the editors of The Duelist, who then selected the final sixteen invitees.

The following sixteen players, in alphabetical order, represent the invitees to the first annual Duelist Invitational. Good luck to all.

Ups and Downs at a Novice's First Sanctioned Magic Tournament

by Alex Anderson

After a 500-kilometer drive from my Ottawa home, entering the Pro Tour–Dallas Qualifier in Toronto was a decision that had more to do with making the most of the trip than my hopes of winning. It was the Mirage Prerelease that drew me to the event, but I figured if I was going to spend that much time on the highway for a few games of Magic then I'd better get in a lot of games. I did that, that's for sure.

I don't know exactly what I was expecting when I walked into the host hotel. My mouth was a little dry and my palms damp—anxiety and nerves. A relative newcomer to the game, this would be my first real competition and, despite following previous tournaments rather meticulously through The Duelist, I realized I knew nothing about what I was about to enter...except that it wouldn't be like playing with my friends.

I found the registration room (my first victory!) already crowded forty-five minutes before competition was to begin and it didn't seem to hold any surprises. Several tables covered with white cloths were set up where later some of Magic's big names, notably Wizards of the Coast's Research & Development member Mark Rosewater, would be "gunslinging."

I was handed a form on which to write the contents of my deck. This I did, smiling as I wrote "Lord of Tresserhorn" in all capitals. I noticed a lot of other people giving their decks a last-minute once-over and I decided to follow suit. Not that it could possibly help. Up until eighteen hours before the tournament, I had believed the format was going to be Sealed Deck, so I hadn't started constructing a deck until 3 A.M.—a mere seven hours before the tournament commenced. Hence my decision to use the Lord. I figured I was hosed anyway and was determined not to take things too seriously.

Looking around the room at my competition, an oppressive feeling of futility descended on me and I fought the urge to bail then and there. I'd paid my entrance fee and I was going to play. If I got hammered in my the first couple of matches I could always leave. At least that's what I promised myself.

The competition itself, an eight-round Swiss-styler affair, was run in the hotel's huge banquet room. More tables, more cloth, and more players. Names were called out and opponents selected. I heard my name and fought through the crowd to find the chair with my scorecard sitting in front of it. My first opponent was an outgoing sort named Lashko who greeted me with a smile and a friendly handshake. I was taken aback a bit and realized that I'd expected the other players to be, without exception, serious competitive types who wouldn't crack a smile if they sat on one.

After playing for the full hour allotted, I retired from the table happy with a draw. Actually I felt quite exhilarated. I'd come away from my first taste of Magic competition without being thumped and, though I didn't know it at the time, things would get better. I swept my next two opponents—both people who proved Lashko the exception to the rule about being light-hearted.

That was where my luck would end, however. After going undefeated for the first three rounds, I got hammered, then lost a close one, then got hammered again and I knew I had no chance of making the playoff round. There were still a couple of rounds to play but, somewhat disheartened and exhausted after nearly nine hours of intense Magic, I decided it was finally time to bail. I retired to the registration room where a small crowd had gathered around the gunslingers' table where WotC insider Mark Rosewater dueled all comers.

After watching him beat people up for a while I thought, "What the hell? At least I'll be able to say I played Mark Rosewater" and started throwing my favorite Type II deck together. Surprisingly, I didn't have to wait long before sliding into the seat opposite the voice of Magic: The Puzzling. "What kind of deck do you have?" he asked in a high, slightly reedy voice.

"Type II," I answered. At least, it was until October 1 when two of the deck's key cards got restricted in Type II.

"I've got a Type II [deck] or a fun Type I," offered Rosewater.

"Play with whatever you want," I replied, having recaptured my playing-for-the-fun-of-it attitude.

"Okay. This deck will beat you in a way you've never been beaten before," said Rosewater, reaching for the Type I. "At least, it should." I then proceeded to draw three Strip Mines, two Hymn to Tourachs, and Sengir Vampire in my first eight cards.

"Now we know why they restricted Strip Mine," Rosewater said for the small crowd, somewhat indignant after I stripped his Library of Alexandria with the third Mine. I went on to beat the gunslinger, winning an Ice Age booster in the process, but more importantly putting a nice capper on a long day.

In the end I went 2–3–1 in the competition—not bad for my first tournament. And I did enjoy myself. I learned that anyone can compete. Your name doesn't have to be Justice or Råde to do well. I found myself spending much of the five-hour drive home thinking about what I'll do for the next Qualifier; if I'm lucky I'll do much better. But if not, maybe Rosewater will be there again.

McGOUGH•SOUNDS•OFF

"seeing a mirage"

"When the WotC staff first wheeled out the boxes and boxes of Mirage*, the hush and murmur was classic...."*

by Scott McGough

SPECIAL THANKS TO DOUG ENDE

A full three weeks before its first official appearance, Mirage loomed large in more than twenty North American cities. On September 21 and 22, 1996, more than 7,000 people attended a coordinated wave of Prerelease events, lured not only by the chance to see Magic's first stand-alone expansion since Ice Age, but also to be among literally the first players in the world to compete with the new cards.

I was intrigued by what the Mirage Prerelease events presented to the game. By definition, none of the players would have seen the cards before (except for the loony who went dumpster-diving for The Duelist's checklist before it was officially released...the shredder salesman sends his thanks, pal); and I maintain that limited environments provide the most complete test of a player's ability. One of Magic's greatest strengths is its ability to remain fresh to seasoned veterans while remaining accessible and interesting to newcomers, and I wanted to see how Mirage lived up to that test. I decided to recruit a correspondent, Seattle resident Doug Ende, to play in the tournament and to share his impressions with me, since I would never know first hand (WotC employees are barred from sanctioned events).

Ende's perception of Sealed Deck, heading into the Prerelease event, was quite different than my own. He made the following claim: "Sealed Deck is often touted as the best measure of a player's 'skill'—both strategically [deck design] and tactically [dueling]...but card availability is so restricted that elaborate combinations are impossible, so deck-design decisions fall back on the two most efficient, general means of dealing damage: direct damage and creatures. These tactics are somewhat predictable."

The first thing he did was disagree with me, using the argument I laid down in the Pro Tour–Long Beach recap article that appeared in issue #2. He didn't share my high opinion of the Sealed-Deck environment, but was with me on the thrill of playing in it with a new card set. For that reason (and because I couldn't immediately think of a counter argument to his), I sent my volunteer proxy to the event with an eye toward talking to me about it later. I myself would prowl around the perimeter as an observer, and ponder.

Ende's remarks about Sealed Deck's limitations are valid: without the necessary uncommon/rare resources to execute complex combinations, straightforward direct damage and dangerous creatures would hold sway. Deck themes like "permission" or "hand destruction" would be hampered by a shortage of complimentary cards, and these themes would become pillars of a deck's design, rather than its foundation. I was not convinced, however, that Sealed-Deck success could be reduced to a simple formula of lucky creature draws. In my mind, the best players make the most out of the cards they have...no matter how many they have, or in what format they're playing.

My correspondent's reports from the tournament floor supported his initial concerns: fast, creature-based decks were prevalent (one player was able to field a deck with seventeen flyers), and the new creature abilities routinely changed the course of matches. Nearly all of the between-round chatter was about new creatures players had encountered and the amazing things they could do. As the buzz spread, however, I began to realize something: the sheer number of creatures available and the broad range of their special abilities made this Sealed-Deck event anything but predictable.

Mirage is, after all, supposed to be a fast, creature-heavy set. In keeping with its vibrant African color palette and the dynamic additions of phasing and flanking to the rules, Mirage's game play also leans toward the big and the bold. Very large phasing creatures have routinely low casting costs to compensate for their semi-availability; instant Charms yield potent, flexible advantages specific to each color; and low-cost artifact Diamonds contribute to the entire spectrum of mana production. Mirage, like Alliances, will affect every level of play in all formats. Where Alliances accomplished this through the introduction of pitch costs and playable versions of degenerate cards, Mirage will do so by reintroducing the ragged but energetic power of a rapid and well-organized creature assault. Just as Alliances impacted the Standard (Type II) environment, Mirage is especially suited to impact Sealed Deck.

"Ultimately, Sealed Deck cuts off part of the Magic 'multiverse,' because many, many cards are only useful when used in certain combinations," explained Ende. "[But] I also learned that my presumptions about Sealed Deck might have been mistaken...who wouldn't want to play with Zebra Unicorn, if at all possible?"

My correspondent and I went into the Mirage Prerelease with different views, but we both came away liking what we saw.

Germany's F
Triumphs

The Atlanta Market Center certainly proved to be a unique setting for Magic's latest Pro Tour stop. Not only were the players competing on the atrium floor of the spectacular, 15-story edifice, but they were just steps away from Centennial Park, which one month earlier served as the heavily trafficked tourist site for this year's Summer Olympic Games. The scent of competition still filled the air.

From September 13 through 15, several hundred Magic players converged on the Atlanta Apparel Mart to do what they do best. A total of 191 Master-division participants—representing countries including Germany, Australia, Belgium, The Czech Republic, Canada, Finland, Switzerland, and Mexico—along with 59 Junior-division players, battled through several rounds of Sealed-Deck, Swiss-style play. This tournament, however, had an added twist to it.

For good measure, Wizards of the Coast's first Pro Tour event for the 1996-97 season marked the public unveiling of Mirage, Magic's ninth expansion set and second stand-alone series. Not only were the players unfamiliar with the cards, but they were unaware of the vast number of large creatures included. Needless to say, the spin made for interesting duels throughout the weekend.

Frank Adler Soars Overall

by Terry Melia

"From what I've seen of the Mirage cards here, there appears to be a few broken cards that can change the game in a heartbeat," said Canada's Peter Radonjic following Friday's fifth round. "It's probably a bad thing overall because it increases the luck factor when you have unbalanced cards like that. So far, I'm having the worst luck I've ever had in a sanctioned tournament. I haven't really seen any spectacular plays yet, but I haven't seen any dumb moves either."

George Baxter of Dallas, the 1996 U.S. National Finalist, noted: "Sealed Deck, in my opinion, is not a very good tournament format. But it seems like with Mirage, the cards are much better to use with Sealed Deck. There's a large number of very strong cards that are common that everybody can get. So that means there's a high percentage that you won't get stuck with a crappy deck."

Scott Johns of California said, "I think most players like a lot of the abilities. But right now, the big complaint seems to be that there's too much X [factor]. It's like Mirage could be called the 'X' expansion."

Drawing powerful, medium-to-large creature cards can change the complexion of any Magic game. But with Mirage, that seems to be more the rule and not the exception. Said Johns, "I love the creatures; there's very few lame creatures in Mirage. They all have decent power, so they all can do things."

Following Friday's Master-division gruelathon, eight players emerged as quarterfinalists: John Yoo of Buena Park, California; Aaron Muranaka of Layton, Utah; Darwin Kastle of Allston, Massachusetts; Canada's Matt Vienneau and Terry Borer; Germany's Frank Adler; Chris Pikula of Chester, Indiana; and Mike Long of Centreville, Virginia. But following Sunday's championship round, Adler distinguished himself as the top gun overall.

"I'm extremely happy," said Adler, who used a red/blue/green main deck during Sunday's finals. "I think my deck from today was a little bit stronger than Friday's because there is more [card] manipulation in it. My strategy was to keep my opponent guessing, so I did some wild things, then he [Adler's opponent] began to make errors. Those errors usually resulted in victory for me." (For details on Adler's championship, see page 19.) Adler defeated Kastle in the finals, 3–1. For his efforts, Adler returned to Germany $26,000 richer. Kastle, meanwhile, who competed with a green/black/blue deck on Sunday, earned $16,000. (For details on Kastle's play, turn to page 20.)

Overall, the Top 16 Master decks used at Pro Tour–Atlanta contained the following color compositions: red/black/green, four; red/black/blue, three; red/blue/green, two; red/green/white, two; red/black/white, two; red/blue/white, one; four colors (no green), one; and four colors (no white), one. Red was, by far, the color of choice in Atlanta, as 60 of the Top 64 place-finishers (94%) were using some degree of red. Black was next, used in 43 of the Top 64 decks (67%), while blue (37 decks, 58%), green (36 decks, 56%), and white (29 decks, 45%) rounded out the field.

Pro Tour–Atlanta's eighteen-and-under Junior division, meanwhile, sported fewer players than the Master ranks but the competition was just as intense. In the Junior finals, eighteen-year-old Aaron Souders of Elburn, Illinois, swept fifteen-year-old upstart Louis Beryl of Palm Beach Gardens, Florida, 3–0. For his outstanding play, Souders earned a $8,400 scholarship; Beryl, meanwhile, came away with $5,000 in scholarship winnings. Souders is presently a sophomore attending Eureka College in Eureka, Illinois, and his winnings will immediately help defray the cost of school. Beryl, who's only a sophomore in high school, still has time to think about where he'd like to attend college. (See related story about Junior scholarships on pages 42-43.)

The next stop on WotC's 1996-97 Pro Tour schedule takes place this month in Dallas. From November 22 to 24, at the Dallas/Fort Worth Lakes Hilton in Grapevine, players will gather once again. Master-division participants will compete in a Standard (Type II) tournament with a combined purse of $150,000. Junior players will compete for the Junior World title and $60,000 in scholarship prize money, including $16,000 to the winner and $10,000 to the finalist.

The remainder of the 1996-97 Pro Tour season includes Long Beach, California, in late February; Paris, France, in April; and New York City in June. The 1997 Magic World Championships will once again be held in the Emerald City (Seattle) next August.

Savage Twister to the Rescue

BY TERRY MELIA

"When I first looked at it, I thought, 'Oh no, just another boring card game.'"

Frank Adler's no stranger to Magic. He's been playing the game for nearly three years, ever since being introduced to it by members of his role-playing guild in Germany.

"When I first looked at it, I thought, 'Oh no, just another boring card game,'" recalled Adler. "But then after I tried playing my first game, I knew I had to learn it."

It's a good thing he did. Although a relative newcomer to the Pro Tour scene, Adler's now a force to be reckoned with. At Pro Tour–Atlanta, he not only made his presence felt, but earned $26,000 by finishing first in the always competitive Master-division ranks. Atlanta marked Adler's second Pro Tour event; he competed at Pro Tour–Long Beach, but finished outside of the Top 64.

"I'm very happy with my performance here. I was shooting to make the Top 16," said the thirty-two-year-old computer programmer from Koln, Germany. "At Long Beach, I didn't train for Booster Draft enough; I had only played it twice before in Germany. In Germany, no one plays Booster Draft."

But Sealed-Deck play in Germany is another story. And for Adler in Atlanta, Sealed Deck spelled victory. "I've trained in a lot of Sealed-Deck tournaments, so I think that helped," he said.

On Friday, competing against a field of 191 other players through nine exhausting rounds of Swiss-style play, Adler posted an impressive match record of 7–1–1. His only defeat came against Jimmy Wong of Canada in Round 3, while his draw occurred, interestingly enough, against eventual championship-round opponent Darwin Kastle of Allston, Massachusetts.

Adler's deck from Friday sported a couple of good direct-damage spells and several medium-to-large creatures. "I had some good creatures, yes, and two good flyers that helped me win several games," he said, "but the library manipulation card [Sealed Fate] won me more games."

In Sunday's quarterfinals, which sported a best-of-three-games format, Adler squared off against Canada's Matt Vienneau. Adler's sealed deck on Sunday included three key X spells: Tropical Storm, Savage Twister, and Kaervek's Torch. The Savage Twister went to work first.

In Game 1, Adler's patience paid off. He waited until Vienneau laid out several creatures, taking damage along the way, then dropped Savage Twister—immediately wiping out five of Vienneau's damage-doers. "I took some damage, yes, but then I was able to overrun him with the creatures I had backed up in my hand," he said.

In Game 2, Vienneau found himself mana-screwed and never could get on track.

In the best-of-five semifinals, Adler met John Yoo of Buena Park, California, Friday's top player (8–0–1 match record). Though their match went to a fifth and deciding game, each of Yoo's three defeats were largely the result of drawing too few land cards. "John was a very good opponent and played his deck well, but I think I got lucky since he wasn't able to draw a whole lot of mana."

In the championship finals, Adler faced Kastle. After splitting the first two games, the players battled gallantly in Game 3. Kastle got the upper hand early on and led 20–9 eighteen minutes into the contest. However, in an effort to stop Adler's Kaervek's Torch, Kastle added white to his deck. The strategy, however, actually backfired.

Said Adler, "He had tricked me with all of his big creatures in Game 1, so I had put one or two more creatures in my deck to hold him off. I think he made a mistake, though, to change his colors; that actually made his deck weaker."

Added Kastle, "It's arguable that Frank outplayed me. But Game 3 was especially disappointing because it was the second time [also in Game 1] where I felt like I played myself out of the match."

In Game 4, Adler got card advantage early on and Kastle—with too much land and not enough creatures—was history.

'It's Arguable He Out-played Me'

Kastle's Wish Comes True, Sort of

by Terry Melia

Be careful what you wish for, because you might just get it. Here's what Darwin Kastle had to say about final-round opponent Frank Adler, moments before their championship match.

"No offense to Frank, but I'm really happy he won. I hate to admit this, but I was really intimidated by John Yoo since everybody says he's the best Sealed-Deck player around. I was also a little bit intimidated because everyone was saying he's got a God deck. So just as long as I don't have to play John, that's fine."

Perhaps Kastle should have hoped that Yoo emerged victorious in the semifinals. Perhaps he should've donned a Braves baseball cap, instead of the White Sox cap he was sporting. After all, he was in Atlanta.

"I'm really not a superstitious person," said the twenty-five-year-old marketing administrator from Allston, Massachusetts. "I just thought it looked pretty cool."

Kastle couldn't have been happier playing Adler in the finals. The pair had met previously in the eighth round of Friday's nine-round Magic marathon and actually wound up splitting their match. Kastle won the first game, Adler the second, and the third duel was called on account of time.

"It was a pretty crucial match for both of us and I felt I was gonna win that third game but then time ran out," said Kastle. "Oh well, now we have a rematch in the finals. I think Frank's a solid player and a solid deck builder, but I don't think he's as good as John. At least I hope not. If he is, I'm in trouble."

Kastle found trouble in a hurry. Playing a green/black/blue deck, he encountered tough terrain against Adler's mix of red/blue/green. In fact, at times, he longed for his deck from Friday, a blue/red/black combination that tallied a 7–1–1 match record.

"My favorite colors in Sealed Deck are red, blue, and black. On Friday, I had great blue, great red, and great black," explained Kastle. "But today, I had a weaker selection. I wasn't happy."

After Kastle and Adler split the first two games of the finals, Adler got the upper hand by coming from behind to win Game 3. "Frank didn't have that many good creatures," said Kastle. "The two [Ekundu] Cyclopses were his strength, but the big problems I had were with Savage Twister and [Kaervek's] Torch. I played the whole first game thinking he didn't have a Torch, but apparently my information was incorrect."

Throughout the finals, in an effort to combat Adler's mass-damage spells, Kastle kept swapping out his green for either red or white. In Game 3, however, his deck alteration would cost him.

"Game 3 was disappointing because that was the second time where I felt like I played myself out of the match. In Games 1 and 3, I feel like if I played differently, I would have won. I mean, I was really disheartened to lose [Game 3] sitting on a Drain Life in my hand."

Sensing fear in his opponent, Adler wasted little time in beating Kastle in Game 4. "Frank played a lot better today than when I played him on Friday," said Kastle. "It's arguable that he outplayed me." The finals lasted just two hours and fifteen minutes.

Despite stumbling in the finals, Kastle still walked away with $16,000.

"The first thing I'm gonna do is pay off my credit-card debt. The second thing is I'm gonna pay off my friends who supported me 'cause we always split at big tournaments. And then I'm gonna put some of it in the bank to wait on those taxes I'm gonna have to pay off."

Asked to reveal the keys to doing well in Sealed-Deck play, Kastle shared the following opinion:

"I have certain basic philosophies which I think are pretty sound," he said. "If you play with a lot of mana and you play with an aggressive deck, a lot of times somebody who may have more powerful cards than you, but whose mana comes out a little slower than yours...then you can overwhelm them before they really get going."

No argument here.

So Close, yet So Far

John Yoo
Can't Get Enough Magic

For John Yoo, Magic has become the habit he can't kick.

"I've quit Magic many times," said Yoo, a 22-year-old from Irvine, California. "I've quit two or three times now. I sold all my cards, got more, sold all my cards, got more. I always quit for a little while."

Yoo, who's been playing for about two years, quit most recently at about the time of Pro Tour–Long Beach in May this year. The lure of money on the Magic Pro Tour, though, was enough incentive to get Yoo back in the game. "A couple of friends I know did pretty well [at the professional tournaments], and they won some money. And I figured if they could do it I could too." For Yoo, a business student at Concordia University, getting back into Magic has been the right decision—financially, anyway.

Yoo made it all the way to the semifinals before getting swept by eventual champion Frank Adler, 3–0.

The high finish went beyond Yoo's initial expectations. "Just to make it all the way out here [tied for third]—I'm really happy," he said. "When I made my deck on Friday [for the opening rounds], I was just hoping to get $400 [Top 64]. I wasn't even dreaming that I could come out first with that deck." But first is where Yoo found himself at the end of the day Friday, undefeated with a 8–0–1 record.

In the quarterfinals, Yoo beat Mike Long 2–1 before the mana gods aligned against him. Against Adler, Yoo drew a combined five lands in the first two games, despite thorough and methodical shuffling and playing with an almost 50% mana ratio: 19 lands in a 41-card deck. "The last game, I drew one mana my opening draw and didn't draw another mana for a while. It's just bad luck," he said. "I just got really unlucky. It just wasn't in it for me."

Though some may attribute Yoo's high finish to luck or fortuitous matchups, Yoo has played more than his share of Limited-Environment (Sealed-Deck) games.

"Sealed deck is my game," he said. "When I'm back home, I play sealed deck almost every day, at least three or four times a day with my friends," he said. "We play grandmaster [format] all the time.... Sometimes we'll do seven grandmasters in a day."

Aaron Muranaka
Making an Impression

Finishing in the semifinals round at your very first Magic professional tournament isn't a bad way to make your debut on the Pro Tour circuit. Just ask Aaron Muranaka.

Muranaka, a 19-year-old sophomore at the College of Eastern Utah, made it all the way to the Round of 4 before losing 3–1 to eventual finalist Darwin Kastle. "I'm really happy [with my finish]," he said.

Muranaka had defeated Chris Pikula 2–0 in the quarterfinals to advance, and things looked good as he won the first game against Kastle.

"The first game [against Kastle], I was really excited. I got Reign of Terror at the right time and wiped out his creatures," he said. "I was really excited after the first game because I thought I had a better deck."

Unfortunately, even if he did have a better deck, the draw just wasn't there for the Layton, Utah, resident, as Kastle took the next three games. "I had a lot of cards that never even came out of my deck—or I'd have cards with dual-color casting costs and I just couldn't get them out," he said. "I just got run over. It happens."

Muranaka entered the finals second by finishing the qualifying round with a 7–1–1 record. "Friday, I had a God deck," said Muranaka. "I had three X spells and a bunch of big creatures." Muranaka's only loss came at the hands of fellow semifinalist John Yoo.

Muranaka seemed pretty pleased with his finish, for which he won $9,000, as well as invitations to the next four professional tournaments. Not bad for a rookie.

No Happy Medium

Chris Pikula

Feast or famine—that's how it was for Chris Pikula when it came to drawing lands in the quarterfinals. The happy medium never showed up for the twenty-one-year-old student on the final day of Pro Tour–Atlanta.

"[In the first game] I had four creatures with a casting cost of 4 in my hand and drew only three land—I never drew a fourth," said Pikula. "And they're all good creatures. It was very upsetting."

In the second game, Pikula got off to a good start, getting out a couple creatures before his deck stalled. "I drew land for four or five turns, and he [Aaron Muranaka] kept drawing 1/1 blockers to stay alive. By the time I drew anything good, he got his dragon (Jungle Wurm) out and with his Dark Banishing, he targeted my flyer that was hitting him for 3 damage a turn.

"I even cast the blue card that allows you to draw three cards and place two on the top or bottom of your library [Dream Cache], and I drew three land. It wasn't good."

Pikula studies applied physics at Cornell University in Ithaca, NY.

All things considered, though, defeating 185 other players to make it into the Round of 8 wasn't bad considering it was only Pikula's second Sealed-Deck tournament ever. His first was at a Neutral Ground tournament in New York City a couple weeks earlier. He'd also finished dismally at Pro Tour–Long Beach.

Pikula thought that string might continue when he lost his first match of the tournament to Muranaka, who'd end up in second place on Friday. "I didn't realize my deck [the first day] was so good because I was like, 'Wow, I just got beat in the first round.'" But it was enough to put him in the Top 8 as he went on to win the next seven rounds, ending Friday with a 7–2 record, good enough for seventh place.

Lose the Bow Tie

Mike Long

Next time, leave the bow tie at home.

At least that's what Mike Long concluded after losing in the quarterfinals on Sunday. Long had dressed for the final day in a white shirt, blue-and-black-striped suspenders, and a blue-striped bow tie for luck; but alas, it didn't help.

"I think I'm going to drop the bow tie thing because this is two tournament finals now where it hasn't worked out," he said. "I play well with the suspenders, but [get] bad matchups with the bow tie." Long's other bow-tie loss was in the semifinals of the U.S. National Championships in July. It should be noted, however, that Long's bow tie was red-and-green at that tournament.

Dress accessories aside, Long, who made both the 1995 and 1996 U.S. National Teams, didn't feel he got the cards that could take him to victory on the last day in Atlanta. "My deck [for the final day] wasn't very good," he said. "It had a few decent cards, but they were spread across five colors and they came together in an awkward manner so that I couldn't handle a better deck."

That better deck belonged to John Yoo, who beat Long 2–1 to advance to the semifinals. Long expressed surprise that he was even able to win a single game during his quarterfinal match. "I think I played extremely well—I don't think he [Yoo] was at the top of his game," he said.

Long, 21, from Centreville, VA, studies history at James Madison University and plays regularly at the Time Capsule in Chester, VA, two hours away. Though he's played in every Pro Tour event so far and plans to attend every one through Paris, he says he doesn't play in many local tournaments. "I stick mostly to the big ones," he said.

Savage Twister of Fate

Matt Vienneau

Talk about mistaken instincts. Matt Vienneau of Canada thought he had no chance of making the Top 8 on the first day when he first saw his cards. "Friday I felt I had a mediocre deck," he recalled, "but things went well for me. It all worked out." Vienneau ended the first day with a 7–1–1 record, good enough for fourth place going into the final day.

For the finals, all the players were issued new sealed decks, and Vienneau got all the strong cards he'd been missing on Friday. "I felt I could handle just about anything," he said. "I had sixteen creatures and a lot of them were good ones: 3/3 creatures, 4/2 creatures, creatures with flying, Incinerate, Power Sink, Ray of Command, Phyrexian Purge…

"I figured I was in good position," he continued. "I playtested [the deck] as I was building it, and I put out four creatures by my eighth turn."

In the opening game against quarterfinal opponent Frank Adler of Germany, that's exactly what Vienneau did. The problem was Adler was holding a Savage Twister ("Savage Twister deals X damage to each creature"), which he played after all of his own creatures had phased out, leaving Vienneau defenseless. "I just couldn't recover [after that]," he said. "[Before that,] I was hitting him for 8 damage when I attacked."

In the second game, Vienneau got off to a slow start, hampered by mana problems, but it looked like the twenty-four-year-old computer programmer from Toronto would pull the same trick on Adler that Adler pulled in the first game: Vienneau was holding a Phyrexian Purge ("Pay 3 life per target: Destroy any number of target creatures"). Unfortunately, Vienneau never got the single red mana he needed the whole game, despite having five mountains in his deck. "It was just horrible," he said.

Despite it all, Vienneau, a solid Sealed-Deck player (once ranked as high as second in the DCI) and a quarterfinalist at the 1996 Canadian National Championships, was pretty satisfied. "I can't be too upset," he said. "I'm really happy that I did this well."

Better Left Unsaid

Terry Borer

Terry Borer will probably think twice before asking the question "Do you have any fast effects?" the next couple times he plays Magic. That question cost him at least $3,500 by deciding the final game of his quarterfinal match against Darwin Kastle.

Borer had split the first two games against Kastle, but seemed to have the third game in hand. Though Kastle had Borer down to just 1 life, Borer had enough creatures to finish Kastle off—if he used the Grave Servitude ("You may choose to play Grave Servitude as an instant; if you do, bury it at end of turn. Enchanted creature gets +3/-1 and is black.") in his hand on one of his unblocked creatures. Kastle, on the other hand, was holding onto Drain Life but had drawn only one of the eight swamps he had in his deck.

After declaring his potentially game-winning attack, Borer then asked Kastle, "Do you have any fast effects?" Kastle declined, and Borer then attempted to cast the Grave Servitude on one of his unblocked creatures, which would have brought Kastle to 0 life. But tournament Head Judge Tom Wylie wouldn't allow it. By asking the question, Borer (as the active player) implied that he wasn't going to cast any fast effects; since Kastle declined to cast anything, the "window" to cast effects had closed and Borer still had Grave Servitude in his hand. The next turn, Kastle drew his second swamp and cast Drain Life for 1 damage to win.

An upset Borer contested the ruling, but to no avail. "I thought it was a well-planned attack; everything was going cool…[when I asked if he had any fast effects] I meant at this time—I didn't mean for the rest of the game," he said. "That was ruled against me several times in the tournament on Friday, where people would ask me that and I'd say no, and then they wanted to do something and they were allowed to. Not by Tom Wylie, I guess, but I don't call the Head Judge for every ruling. I was really upset. They're making an interpretation of the rule that goes against me because of the semantics of my question."

Borer, who studies engineering science at the University of Toronto, said he was planning to donate the $5,500 in prize money to charity. "I'm not super rich, but I have what I need and I have my Junior scholarship [Borer won the Junior division at Pro Tour–Columbus] and I have my team tournament [Borer was a member of Team Canada, which tied for third]," he said. "I play poker and sometimes when I win I do the same thing."

The tournament was Borer's first as a Master-division competitor—he turned nineteen on August 29, which disqualified him from competing in the Junior division—and despite the ruling, he was satisfied with his finish. "I really wanted to finish first. I really wanted to establish myself as one of the top Magic players," he said, "I guess I met all my goals."

Top 8 Master Decks from Friday

analysis by Beth Moursund

John Yoo, United States (first place)

Yoo put only two non-creature spells in his deck: Flare and Pacifism. Everything else was creatures—mostly small creatures—with ways to avoid being blocked. His best cards, he said, were his two Unseen Walkers, which not only have forestwalk but can give other creatures forestwalk as well. These helped him win a lot of games. "I think I only ran up against one person who wasn't playing green, and I sideboarded him out. Everybody was playing green." He also had Dwarven Nomads to make small creatures unblockable, and Basalt Golem to turn anything that blocks it into a 0/2 Wall. Finally, seven of his creatures had flying. He used his Benevolent Unicorn to save his 1-toughness creatures from Flares and Chaos Charms.

1 Decklist

1	Basalt Golem	2	Patagia Golem
1	Benevolent Unicorn	1	Searing Spear Askari
1	Burning Shield Askari	1	Uktabi Faerie
1	Desert Nomad	2	Unseen Walker
1	Ekundu Griffin	1	Unyaro Griffin
1	Femeref Scouts	1	Viashino Warrior
1	Flare	1	Wild Elephant
1	Giant Mantis	1	Windreaper Falcon
1	Granger Guildmage	1	Zuberi, Golden Feather
1	Igneous Golem	6	Forest
1	Mtenda Lion	6	Mountain
1	Pacifism	6	Plains

Aaron Muranaka, United States (second place)

Muranaka may have had the most direct damage of any player in the Master division: seven damage spells, including two Kaervek's Torches and Volcanic Geyser. He didn't have too many creatures, but with all his direct damage, he didn't need many—especially if he got his Crash of Rhinos into play. He also had Bone Harvest to recycle creatures from his graveyard, and Preferred Selection to race through his deck looking for the direct damage. His strategy was simple: "Just pound on 'em with big creatures and burn 'em to death," he said. "It wasn't a thinking person's deck."

2 Decklist

1	Bone Harvest	1	Phyrexian Vault
1	Burning Shield Askari	1	Preferred Selection
1	Crash of Rhinos	2	Quirion Elves
1	Enduku Cyclops	1	Raging Spirit
1	Femeref Archers	1	Sandstorm
1	Flare	1	Spitting Earth
2	Giant Mantis	1	Volcanic Geyser
1	Grasslands	1	Windreaper Falcon
1	Incinerate	7	Forest
1	Jungle Wurm	7	Mountain
2	Kaervek's Torch	3	Swamp
1	Patagia Golem

Darwin Kastle, United States (third place)

Kastle played a well-rounded deck that included a bit of direct damage, a few anti-creature spells, some small- and medium-sized creatures, and two huge phasing Sandbar Crocodiles. "The strength of my deck was that I didn't have any game-breaking cards; I just had a very balanced deck," he said. He mentioned that some of his best cards were in his sideboard. He had misread Thirst during the deck-construction phase and didn't put it in his main deck, but as soon as he had it played against him and realized that it didn't have cumulative upkeep, he started using it in each match. Another of his sideboard cards, Benthic Djinn, was a game-winner against any opponent playing blue.

3 Decklist

1	Azimaet Drake	1	Grave Servitude
1	Bay Falcon	1	Haunting Apparition
1	Breathstealer	1	Incinerate
1	Burning Palm Efreet	1	Reality Ripple
1	Cadaverous Knight	1	Restless Dead
1	Cerulean Wyvern	2	Sandbar Crocodile
1	Chaos Charm	1	Shauku's Minion
1	Dark Banishing	1	Talruum Minotaur
2	Ekundu Cyclops	5	Island
1	Enfeeblement	7	Mountain
2	Flare	6	Swamp

Matthew Vienneau, Canada (fourth place)

Vienneau built one of the most interesting decks of the day. He had only a tiny bit of direct damage, and just ten creatures total, one of which was a Wall. What he did have was plenty of ways to frustrate his opponent, beginning with the most annoying card in Mirage, Grinning Totem. Next came two excellent enchantments: Thirst to neutralize an opponent's creature, and Barbed Foliage to depower flankers and damage or kill non-flying attackers. He could often destroy two creatures at once with Ray of Command; he could stop all damage from one attack with Fog; and he could deal with a variety of threats with two counterspells. He eventually won most of his games with Crash of Rhinos or Goblin Scouts.

4 Decklist

1	Armor of Thorns	1	Grinning Totem
1	Barbed Foliage	1	Jungle Troll
1	Boomerang	1	Jungle Wurm
1	Chaos Charm	1	Moss Diamond
1	Cinder Cloud	1	Power Sink
1	Crash of Rhinos	1	Ray of Command
1	Dissipate	1	Searing Spear Askari
1	Dream Fighter	1	Talruum Minotaur
1	Flare	1	Thirst
1	Fog	1	Wall of Roots
1	Giant Mantis	5	Forest
1	Gibbering Hyenas	6	Mountain
1	Goblin Scouts	6	Swamp

"I didn't have that many good cards; I had an adequate-to-average deck."

Frank Adler, Germany (fifth place)

Adler's deck included a couple of good direct-damage spells, some nice creature control, and a wide selection of small- to medium-large creatures. He said that his best card, however, was Sealed Fate, which allowed him to stack the top X cards of his opponent's library. Kaervek's Purge ran a close second. Three of his creatures had flying, one of which could give other creatures flying. He also had an enchantment to give a creature flying, and an Efreet to ground and damage flying creatures. This obviously gave him air superiority. His "pumpable" Dirtwater Wraith with swampwalking was very strong against the many players using black.

Decklist

1	Armor Guildmage	1	Kaervek's Torch
1	Bad River	1	Kukemssa Serpent
1	Barreling Attack	1	Merfolk Raiders
1	Bay Falcon	1	Raging Spirit
1	Blighted Shaman	1	Ray of Command
1	Blistering Barrier	1	Sealed Fate
1	Bone Harvest	1	Shadow Guildmage
1	Burning Palm Efreet	1	Soar
1	Burning Shield Askari	1	Spitting Earth
1	Cadaverous Knight	1	Thirst
1	Dirtwater Wraith	1	Vaporous Djinn
2	Ekundu Cyclops	5	Island
1	Goblin Tinkerer	7	Mountain
1	Harmattan Efreet	5	Swamp
1	Kaervek's Purge

Chris Pikula, United States (seventh place)

Pikula relied mostly on direct damage, counterspells, and creatures with flying for his wins. His strongest card was Hammer of Bogardan. "It's abusive in Sealed Deck. I actually went four consecutive matches, though, including matches against Mark Chalice and Preston Poulter, and I never drew it, so it was a little upsetting." Besides that, he had four other direct-damage spells and two Granger Guildmages which he could use to poke a target. His two counterspells were backed up by Daring Apprentice, a 1/1 creature that can be sacrificed to counter a spell. Mangara's Tome allowed him to pull needed cards from his deck with little risk, since few players had artifact destruction, and Jungle Patrol's Wall-making ability helped him stop non-flying attackers. Pikula forfeited a game for not having written his land on his deck record (as you can see below); this cost him his final match. His tiebreakers, however, were good enough to put him into the Top 8 anyway.

Decklist

1	Azimaet Drake	1	Power Sink
1	Chaos Charm	1	Raging Spirit
1	Chariot of the Sun	1	Sandbar Crocodile
1	Daring Apprentice	1	Searing Spear Askari
1	Dissipate	1	Soar
1	Flare	1	Talruum Minotaur
2	Granger Guildmage	1	Unyaro Bee Sting
1	Hammer of Bogardan	1	Vaporous Djinn
1	Harmattan Efreet	1	Village Elder
1	Jungle Patrol		Island
1	Jungle Wurm		Forest
1	Kaervek's Torch		Mountain
1	Mangara's Tome

Terry Borer, Canada (sixth place)

Borer ignored the usual "evasion wins games" rule of thumb when constructing his deck. "I had some good flyers and colors but I chose not to play them because I felt they weren't the best. I prefer slightly larger ground creatures. It's really, really difficult to win with flyers unless you have the ground locked up or your opponent has a bad game." By attacking quickly with his ground creatures, he put his opponents on the defensive, forcing them to either take heavy damage or waste their flying creatures in blocking him. His Femeref Archers and Subterranean Spirit, along with a couple of anti-creature spells, provided good defense against any airborne attack.

Decklist

1	Armor of Thorns	2	Quirion Elves
1	Blighted Shaman	1	Raging Spirit
1	Breathstealer	1	Skulking Ghost
1	Crash of Rhinos	1	Soul Rend
1	Dirtwater Wraith	2	Spitting Earth
1	Drain Life	1	Stalking Tiger
1	Ekundu Cyclops	1	Subterranean Spirit
1	Femeref Archers	1	Unyaro Bee Sting
1	Fetid Horror	1	Urborg Panther
1	Granger Guildmage	6	Forest
1	Hivis of the Scale	5	Mountain
1	Jungle Wurm	6	Swamp
1	Kaervek's Purge

Mike Long, United States (eighth place)

Long's deck was built around a core of strong, medium-sized creatures and several excellent anti-creature spells. He had few direct-damage spells, but did have two poking creatures, Shadow Guildmage and Reckless Embermage. His most dangerous creature—to his own forces as well as to his opponent's—was Ravenous Vampire, which must devour a creature each turn or become tapped, but gets +1/+1 each time it does. When asked what was the best card in his deck, Long replied, "I didn't have that many good cards; I had an adequate-to-average deck."

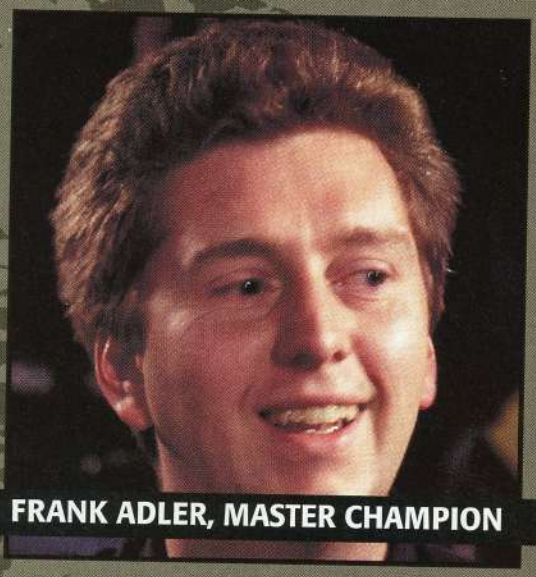
Mastering the Decks

analysis by Beth Moursund



FRANK ADLER, MASTER CHAMPION

Adler's deck on Sunday contained three X damage spells: two mass-creature-destruction spells, Tropical Storm and Savage Twister, and Kaervek's Torch. Savage Twister was his main swing card; by casting it with few creatures in play, he could deal a crippling blow to his opponent. Adler's creatures with phasing worked well for this strategy, too, since he could cast Savage Twister when they were phased out. His other key card was Reckless Embermage. Enchanted with Soar to raise its toughness, the Embermage's 2 damage per turn earned Adler victory in his final match.

"The other cards are all average," he said, "but when you have so many average cards, you take the big creatures so you can hold your opponent off or attack him with that." When building his deck, Adler started with black instead of blue; after looking at the cards more closely, though, he decided that his blue was stronger and switched. He kept six swamps in his sideboard so he could do a mid-match swap if the blue wasn't working well, but that was an adjustment he never needed to make.

Decklist

1	Aleatory	1	Regeneration
1	Bay Falcon	1	Sandbar Crocodile
1	Blistering Barrier	1	Savage Twister
1	Builder's Bane	1	Stalking Tiger
2	Ekundu Cyclops	1	Soar
1	Kaervek's Torch	1	Teferi's Drake
1	Lightning Reflexes	1	Teferi's Isle
1	Locust Swarm	1	Tidal Wave
1	Merfolk Raiders	1	Tropical Storm
1	Power Sink	1	Unyaro Bee Sting
1	Pyric Salamander	6	Forest
1	Quirion Elves	5	Island

DARWIN KASTLE, MASTER FINALIST

Kastle actually played three different decks during the finals, swapping out his green for red or white. His base deck had two direct-damage spells and a poking creature, along with two anti-creature enchantments, a dozen small- to mid-sized creatures, and two big ones. One of his mid-sized creatures, Ravenous Vampire, could become a big creature—but at a terrible price.

"I wish it wasn't in my deck, it scares the hell out of me," said Kastle. On his first color change, the Vampire went out along with all the forests and green spells, to be replaced by mountains, two Urborg Panthers, two Golems, a Cadaverous Knight, and four small direct-damage spells. His other color switch removed the green and replaced it with four white creatures, including Benevolent Unicorn which he hoped would help against Adler's mass-destruction spells, and Pacifism.

Stars on the Move

by Beth Moursund

Aaron Souders, Junior Champion

Aaron Souders is a sophomore at Eureka College in Illinois, and was the oldest competitor playing in Pro Tour–Atlanta's Junior division. He barely squeaked in under the age limitation (18 years or under), as he turned 19 on the Friday following the tournament. Because of this situation, he had to make it at least to the championship finals to win a spot to compete in the Master division at Pro Tour–Dallas this month. Obviously, he succeeded.

Souders has been playing Magic since Arabians Nights was released (Dec. '93) and although he lives in the midwest, he's certainly got a surfer dude's delivery: "I was just sitting at my best friend's house, and he showed me this game that his brother Brock was playing. I'm like, 'What is it?' And he's like, 'It's called Magic.' And he started showing me the cards, and I was like, 'Dude, this is way too complicated. I don't want to see this.' He was like, 'No, come on, it's cool. I'll just teach you.' He started me off on that, and I've been addicted to the bloody game ever since."

Souders plays a lot, both in and out of tournaments. "I play up at Heroes Unlimited every Friday night in Roselle [Illinois], go to Card and Comic Connection in Geneva [also in Illinois] Saturday mornings, and then, if I feel really bored Saturday night, I might go somewhere else and play."

Atlanta was Souders's first Pro Tour event but not his first major tournament. He finished second in the Midwest Regionals ("Twenty-two hours straight, 950 people, six-round Swiss. That's not healthy.") and also played in the U.S. Nationals in Columbus. He won his invitation to Atlanta at a tournament at Hansen's Hobbies in Wilmete, Illinois, the store that ended up becoming his sponsor. "He watched me play, and he offered to sponsor me down here 'cause he said he thought I had a good chance, which, I guess he was right!"

Outside of Magic, Souders spends much of his time on school work. He's majoring in elementary education with a minor in theatre and is a member of Alpha Psi Omega, a national honorary theatre fraternity. After he finishes school he plans to teach kindergarten. Who knows... maybe Magic will become part of his lesson plan?

Louis Beryl, Junior Finalist

Louis Beryl is a student at Sun Coast High School in West Palm, Florida. At 15, Beryl was one of the younger competitors playing at Pro Tour–Atlanta. He's been playing Magic for two years and competing in sanctioned tournaments since the Pro Tour started, but this was his first Pro Tour appearance. He qualified by winning a tournament in Orlando. Beryl was one of a number of players sponsored by New Wave.

Beryl spends most of his time playing Magic. When asked what else he does besides school work and play Magic, he said, "Sleep. Sometimes I eat." After considering this for a moment, he added, "Sometimes my parents make me do homework."

In constructing his two Atlanta decks (Friday's and Sunday's), Beryl followed the philosophy "the best defense is a good offense." He concentrated on small, relatively fast creatures for the most part, along with any direct damage he could get. He was really pleased with his championship deck on Sunday and felt that he should have made a much better showing in the finals. Unfortunately, in one duel he drew no plains, and in another he drew land after land but almost no spells.

Even after making it to the Sealed-Deck finals in Atlanta, Beryl prefers Standard (Type II) tournaments by far. "I think there's more skill involved [in Standard] because you're coming with your own deck. Even though I think Mirage is pretty equal. It's a really good set.... You really have to think about what it is you're doing."

Beryl's looking forward to testing his Standard skills against the best Juniors this month in Dallas. We wish him the best of luck.

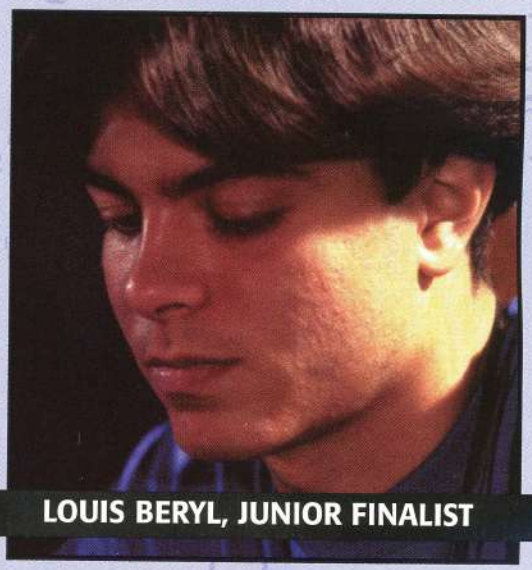
AARON SOUDERS, JUNIOR CHAMPION



LOUIS BERYL, JUNIOR FINALIST

When Souders finished sorting his cards for the finals, he commented that he'd probably be able to afford college this year. His cards were a Sealed-Deck dream. They included three direct-damage X spells, three other direct-damage spells, an Efreet that could tap to deal 2 damage to a creature with flying, and four other anti-creature spells.

"It's just not right. I mean, that shouldn't be legal!" Souders said jokingly when describing his deck. He put in only ten summon spells, but with such excellent non-creatures he didn't need many. The final touch was Goblin Scouts, a sorcery which makes three 1/1 goblins with mountainwalk. "Who doesn't play red in Sealed Deck? Usually the people at the bottom," said Souders. "I figured it would be a safe bet to throw those in." Facing Louis Beryl's Amber Prison during the championship match, Souders sideboarded in Builder's Bane, and managed to zap the Prison and Fire Diamond two games in a row.

Decklist

1	Bay Falcon	1	Lightning Reflexes
1	Burning Palm Efreet	1	Merfolk Seer
1	Cinder Cloud	1	Ray of Command
1	Dark Banishing	1	Restless Dead
1	Dread Specter	1	Spitting Earth
1	Ekundu Cyclops	1	Talruum Minotaur
1	Feral Shadow	2	Thirst
1	Goblin Scouts	1	Volcanic Geyser
2	Gravebane Zombie	5	Island
1	Incinerate	7	Mountain
2	Kaervek's Torch	6	Swamp

Beryl's deck was built along much the same lines as Souders's, though he didn't have as outrageous a collection of direct damage. He had only one X spell, Kaervek's Torch. He did, however, have two spells that could tap or destroy a creature and deal damage at the same time, and three other anti-creature spells; plus, he had Amber Prison, which could tap to pin down either a creature or another card as needed. None of his creatures had a base power greater than 2, though one was pumpable. All of the others had either flanking or flying, along with other special abilities.

"The only card I'm upset about putting in was Divine Offering," he said. "There's just not enough artifacts in Mirage, I guess. I didn't see any. I sideboarded it out every game."

Decklist

1	Afterlife	2	Mtenda Herder
1	Amber Prison	1	Pacifism
1	Burning Shield Askari	2	Searing Spear Askari
1	Dark Banishing	2	Skulking Ghost
1	Delirium	2	Teremko Griffin
1	Divine Offering	2	Wall of Resistance
1	Fire Diamond	1	Wildfire Emissary

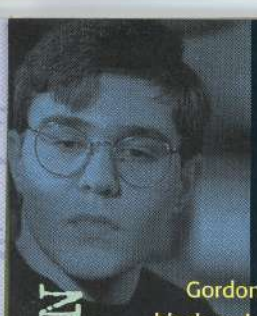
TOP 4 JUNIOR DECKS FROM FRIDAY



JASON GORDON (1ST PLACE)

Gordon played an almost even mixture of four colors: black, red, white, and green. His cards were also quite balanced. He had one large direct-damage spell (Kaervek's Torch), accompanied by several 1-pointers: Flare, Telim'Tor's Darts, Sandstorm, and Shadow Guildmage. His four medium-to-large creatures and two small regenerators provided good ground control, while five flyers, including creatures with banding and first strike, covered the air. He also had a couple of good anti-creature spells. His usual strategy was to lock things up on the ground, then win with flyers or his large Torch.

decklist

1	Cadaverous Knight	1	Shadow Guildmage
1	Crimson Roc	1	Stupor
1	Dark Banishing	1	Telim'Tor's Darts
1	Disenchant	1	Teremko Griffin
1	Ekundu Cyclops	1	Uktabi Faerie
1	Ekundu Griffin	1	Viashino Warrior
1	Feral Shadow	1	Wild Elephant
1	Flare	1	Zhalfirin Knight
1	Kaervek's Torch	5	Forest
1	Nettletooth Djinn	5	Mountain
1	Pacifism	4	Plains
1	Restless Dead	5	Swamp
1	Sandstorm

LOUIS BERYL (2ND PLACE)

Beryl had very little defense, no X spells, and minor direct-damage or anti-creature spells. He did, however, have Dwarven Nomad, which can tap to make a creature of power 2 or less unblockable, and nine creatures small enough to use it on, along with Soulshriek and Firebreathing—either of which could make one of his small creatures quite dangerous. He had only three larger creatures: two Wild Elephants and a Canopy Dragon. "I didn't have much creature removal," he said. "I had to kill them pretty quickly or hold out until I could drop Canopy Dragon."

decklist

1	Burning Palm Efreet	1	Rocky Tar Pit
1	Canopy Dragon	1	Searing Spear Askari
1	Chaos Charm	2	Sewer Rats
1	Charcoal Diamond	1	Soulshriek
1	Dwarven Nomad	1	Spitting Earth
1	Enfeeblement	1	Stupor
1	Feral Shadow	1	Telim'Tor's Darts
1	Firebreathing	1	Tranquil Domain
1	Flare	1	Urborg Panther
1	Giant Mantis	2	Wild Elephants
1	Gravebane Zombie	5	Forest
1	Mountain Valley	5	Mountain
1	Mtenda Lion	6	Swamp
1	Restless Dead

DAVID LIVELY (3RD PLACE)

Lively's deck was built around medium-sized creatures. He had an even dozen creatures of power 2 or 3, including two Griffins and the griffin Legend which gives all other Griffins +1/+1, and Femeref Archers, which made him almost immune to his opponent's flying attackers. Accompanying these were two 1-power creatures and two big ones: the 5/5 Jungle Wurm, with its "negative rampage" vulnerability to large numbers of blockers; and the 4/4 flying Volcanic Dragon, which Lively said helped him win a lot of games. "I pretty much couldn't be blocked and I could send all my creatures through in the air," he said as he described his deck. "I had one direct damage, but it was just that my creature quality was up there."

decklist

1	Alarum	1	Rampant Growth
1	Blistering Barrier	1	Searing Spear Askari
1	Burning Shield Askari	1	Seedling Charm
1	Dazzling Beauty	1	Talruum Minotaur
1	Ekundu Griffin	1	Teremko Griffin
1	Femeref Archers	1	Village Elder
1	Flare	1	Volcanic Dragon
1	Giant Mantis	1	Volcanic Geyser
1	Gibbering Hyenas	1	Zhalfirin Knight
1	Goblin Tinkerer	1	Zuberi, Golden Feather
1	Jungle Wurm	1	Forest
1	Mtenda Lion	6	Mountain
1	Phyrexian Vault	5	Plains
1	Raging Spirit

TREVOR BLACKWELL (4TH PLACE)

Blackwell's deck contained few creatures, but boasted an amazing number of direct-damage spells and artifacts (seven in all), including Kaervek's Torch, Telim'Tor's Darts, two Incinerates, and the dreaded Hammer of Bogardan. Even two of his creatures (Shadow Guildmage and Flame Elemental) had direct-damage capabilities. Among his other creatures he had three regenerators and three flankers, including the legendary Telim'Tor which gives all flankers +1/+1 when he attacks, and Basalt Golem, which turns anything that blocks it into a 0/2 Wall that can't block the Golem. Blackwell's main strategy was to hold his opponents off with regenerators until he could kill them with direct damage.

1	Basalt Golem	1	Searing Spear Askari
1	Blighted Shaman	1	Shadow Guildmage
2	Cadaverous Knight	1	Spitting Earth
1	Dread Specter	1	Telim'Tor
1	Enfeeblement	1	Torrent of Lava
2	Feral Shadow	1	Withering Boon
1	Flame Elemental	1	Telim'Tor's Darts
1	Hammer of Bogardan	1	Teremko Griffin

TIPS FROM THE PROS

by Henry A. Stern

Here's some good advice for players competing in a Sealed-Deck tournament. Listen up.

While attending Pro Tour–Atlanta, The Duelist Sideboard was able to interview many of the professional players and ask for their advice on keys to playing in Sealed-Deck tournaments. In this article, a "sealed deck" refers to a forty-card deck constructed from one starter deck and two booster packs of Magic cards, with an additional five land cards of any type.

The first thing we asked was how many colors they typically use when constructing a sealed deck. Most of the pros seemed to like three colors best. Take Bryce Currence of Claremont, CA, for instance. "I like three colors, sometimes four. I think three is optimal," he said. "That gets you a good mana ratio and you won't be struggling to cast the spells in your hand."

John Yoo of Buena Park, CA, who was the No. 1 seed heading into the final day of competition, responded, "Usually three, but sometimes four—the fourth color being very light like [just enough] red for Fireball or white for Swords to Plowshares, usually two mana to splash the fourth. Generally, there's not enough creature removal in just two colors."

However, some professional players seemed much more willing to play more colors. When asked about this prior to the start of the tournament, Brian Hacker of San Diego stated, "I will probably play four or five colors. I like to take the best cards available and work the mana around them rather than to take the best color or theme available and make everything else fit in. The drawback is that you have to build a slower deck because of the mana distribution."

New Jersey's John Finkel advised, "I always play at least three, usually four or five [colors]. However, pay close attention to the colored casting costs."

This concern over the colored mana requirements was echoed by Texas's George Baxter, "The total casting cost of a spell isn't as important as how much colored mana it requires," said the '96 U.S. Finalist. "For instance, Pox is weak in Sealed Deck because of the casting cost. Also, a mistake many beginners make is using every good card, regardless of casting cost"—for example, using Craw Wurm, Counterspell, Stone Giant, and Hymn to Tourach in the same deck."

The second thing we asked was how many land cards players typically put in a sealed deck. Most said that they used somewhere between 17 and 19, depending on both the number of colors used and the casting costs of the spells. New York's Steven O'Mahoney-Schwartz advised, "With four colors I play 19 land, with three colors, 17 land." Darwin Kastle of Boston, MA, who finished as the Master-division finalist in Atlanta, said, "With a low casting-cost deck, 16 or 17 mana is fine. And if you have a lot of high casting-cost creatures or X spells, 18 or 19 is not out of the question." Matt Place of Kansas City added, "It seems like I almost always play 17 [land]. I count Fellwar Stones and Elves as land for Sealed Deck."

Next we asked about creatures: What makes a creature good for Sealed-Deck play, and how many do players typically use in a deck? Currence answered, "When it comes to creatures, I like everything that deals damage, nothing that doesn't. Creatures are the most important part of any sealed deck because they are the most efficient way of dealing damage. When deciding whether a creature is good enough, special abilities are the key. Flying is best, but banding and other abilities can be very important, too."

Yoo answered by saying, "Casting cost is important, I don't like creatures with two-colored mana. For example, there is a huge difference between Tor Giant and Bone Shaman. Also, any alternate ability that can kill creatures is important [such as a Prodigal Sorcerer or Skeleton Ship]. Typically, I use 17 to 18 creatures. Yesterday, however, I used 21." Hacker noted, "I always look for flying first, and then for regeneration, banding, and trample. I also look for any card that can allow me to use dead cards in my hand such as Nature's Blessing. No minimum or maximum number of creatures. If I have a lot of removal, I won't have as many creatures."

Interestingly, some of the professional players were very prejudiced against small creatures. According to this year's World Finalist Mark Justice of Utah, "I prefer 14 or 15 creatures. However, I hate 1/1 creatures, 1/1's tend to die." Finkel stated, "I don't like cards that won't help me later in a game [small creatures or spells like fog]. In Sealed Deck you usually don't get killed by an early 1/1 creature like Merfolk [of the Pearl Trident], so I don't like to play them. I like bigger creatures or creatures with a good special ability. I usually play between 12 and 18 creatures, but prefer to play on the lower end and use more creature removal."

Also, since Pro Tour–Atlanta was the first time anyone had seen Mirage cards, we asked the players what they thought about playing in an environment where there would be a lot of unknown cards. Place said, "Whenever I look at a new card, I try to imagine myself in the middle of a game in some sort of creature stall, and I think how would this card do? I think that this helps give you perspective on how good a card is. Obviously, if it says 'kill a creature,' it's good. But if the card won't directly help me win, I usually won't play it. Enchantments are usually like this."

O'Mahoney-Schwartz said, "Playing with new cards is very interesting. You should read and then reread all the cards. People like to play with confidence, but it is critical to read all the cards. For instance, at the Alliances Prerelease I had a Lim-Dûl's Cohort in play, my opponent was about to win the game but then attacked with a key regenerator. He didn't remember what the Cohort's special ability is." However, some professional players offered a different perspective. Said Finkel, "I don't think playing with new cards changes things much; just build your own deck. However, I will probably be a bit more cautious on something that could win or lose the game."

Finally, there was a team event staged at Pro Tour–Atlanta that sported an interesting format. Each team (a total of forty-eight competed) was given five Ice Age starter decks and Alliances booster packs. From these cards they had to construct five separate decks. We asked the top two teams—the Pacific Coast Legends and Team Oasis—for any tips relating to this interesting format.

Team PCL spokesman Mark Chalice said, "Instead of trying to make some decks strong at the expense of one or two of the decks, we tried to make five decks equally strong. We figured if you made some of the decks worse than others, then those decks would most likely always lose, and if your good decks got a bad draw then your team would most likely lose the match. Thus, we built five good decks with a solid creature base and enough versatility to handle other decks.

"The way we did this was by opening all of the cards and taking out the 'bad' cards. We then separated them by color and into creature and non-creature cards and further divided them by single- and double-colored mana requirements. This gave us the ability to easily recognize which cards could be easily splashed into the other colors and make up for the weaknesses of those colors. The powerful multicolored cards could also define a color combination. Most of our decks were two-color decks, but some of them were three. Making single-colored decks is generally a mistake.

"Also, we didn't assign the decks to any member of the team until we were done building the deck. That way, no one was personally attached to any one deck and our decisions were not biased. During deck construction, we heard many other teams arguing about decks, and who would get each card, not what deck would get each card."

Team Oasis shared many of the same philosophies with Team PCL, but they also had some unique advice. "Our philosophy was to make five strong two-color decks," said Dave Lyon from Iowa. "We knew that a lot of teams would try to make three or four really strong decks. So, with five good decks we would always be able to get one or two free matches off those teams. And then with our other decks, we only had to win fifty percent of our matches to win [overall]."

Team Oasis sported five different decks: a white/green deck built around banding; a red/green speed deck; a black/blue creature-control deck; a blue/white flying deck; and a red/black fast-creature deck that used Soul Kiss and some creature kill.

"Mainly, we examined beforehand what the best commons were in those two colors," continued Lyon. "For example, a blue/black deck with Norritts, Enervates, and "Tims" [all of which are common cards and all of which you should receive plenty of in five starters] is really strong for creature control. Our advice to other teams would be to go into the tournament with an idea of how the cards are going to be divided up beforehand. You don't want to be arguing about who gets what cards during the deck-construction period."

Keep an eye out for "Tips from the Pros" in the next issue of The Duelist Sideboard. We'll be covering the Standard (Type II) and Classic (Type I) events held at Pro Tour–Dallas in November.

AN EXPENSIVE LESSON

The "Active-Player" Rule

by Beth Moursund

During the third and deciding game of the Master-division quarterfinals, Terry Borer tried to trick opponent Darwin Kastle but ended up tricking himself out of a win instead. Here's what happened....

Borer was at 1 life; Kastle, at 10. Borer attacked with the four creatures he had in play; Kastle blocked one. Borer merely had to cast the Grave Servitude in his hand on an unblocked creature to win the game and the match. Attempting to trick Kastle, Borer asked his opponent if he wanted to do any "fast effects." Kastle answered "no." Borer then attempted to cast his Grave Servitude. Tournament Head Judge Tom Wylie informed Borer that, according to the "active-player" rule, it was too late; as soon as Kastle had answered "no," the fast-effects step ended and damage resolution began.

The active-player rule says that the player whose turn it is (the "active player") always has the first option to start a "batch" of effects or to respond to any effect. The other player (who's considered "inactive") can't do anything until the active player says, "I'm done" or otherwise indicates that he is finished. Then the inactive player has a choice to make. He can either use a fast effect of his own (in which case the option to respond goes back to the active player), or he can decline to use a fast effect. In the latter case, the game proceeds to the next step: effect resolution, if any effects are pending, or the next phase/subphase otherwise. The active player can't turn around and say, "Wait, I'm not really done. I want to cast something else first."

Borer, the Junior-division champion at Pro Tour—Columbus, appealed the ruling, saying that he hadn't actually said, "I'm done." He was just trying to trick Kastle into revealing effects before the rules required him to do so. But the judge's ruling was that by asking his opponent to use fast effects, Borer was effectively saying, "I'm done; do you want to use any fast effects before we go on to the next step?" since an opponent can't legally do anything until that point. If Kastle had taken the bait and cast something, Borer would have been able to cast his spell. But since Kastle declined, the step ended.

Kastle eventually won the match, and Borer was eliminated. For Borer, the lesson was an especially expensive one. At day's end, Kastle took home $16,000; Borer walked away with $5,500.

Pacific Coast Legends Strut Their Stuff

by Jeff J. Lin

Perhaps more than any other event, team competitions stir up feelings of regional pride and rivalries. The eternal debate over who's better—our team or your team—has slowly seeped its way into Magic. Fierce debates and arguments abound at conventions, tournaments, and over the Internet.

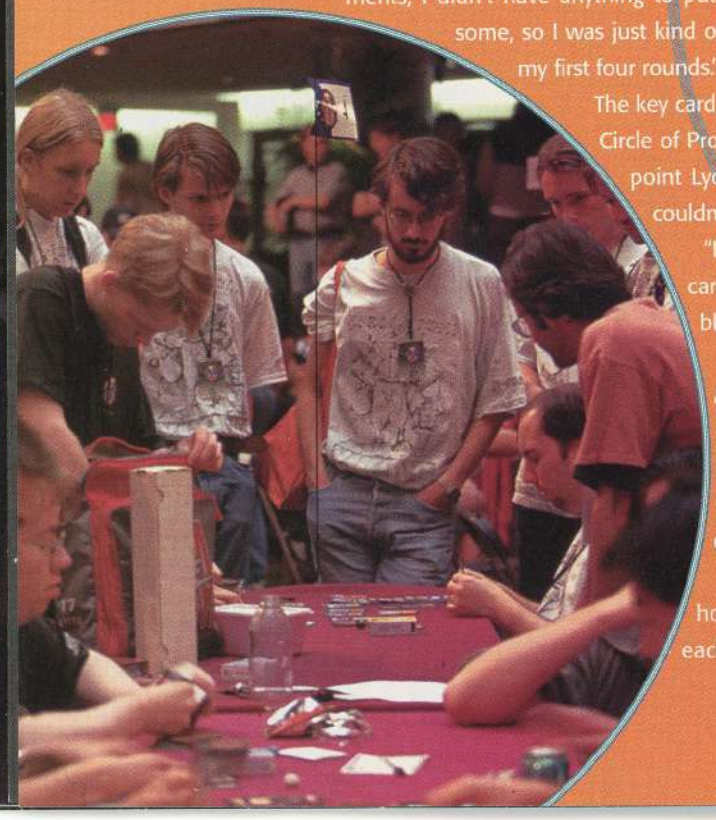
The first Pro Tour team competition—for a while, anyway—helped settle a little of the talk. The finals of the team event ended up being a contest between two regions of the United States: Los Angeles, CA, and the midwest, specifically Iowa. The battle took place on September 14, during Pro Tour–Atlanta.

After six rounds of competition, the L.A.-based Pacific Coast Legends (Team PCL) faced Team Oasis for the winner's trophy. For the curious, Team Oasis—comprised of midwesterners Dave Lyon, Mike Reinking, Jeff Sternal, Kevin Stelzer, and Chris Stelzer—was named not after the Mirage nor after the British pop supergroup of the same name, but rather after a local strip club in Atlanta. "It was sort of an 'in' joke," said Reinking. "We were walking around and we didn't have a name for the team and people kept handing us flyers telling us to go to this strip bar called Oasis."

No matter their namesake, Team Oasis entered the championship match undefeated and seeded first out of a field of forty-eight teams. The much-heralded PCL squad, meanwhile, was seeded No. 2. PCL's lineup consisted of well-known Pro Tour players Mark Justice, Mark Chalice, Mario Robaina, Preston Poulter, and Scott Johns.

For a while, it looked like Team Oasis would pull off the upset. Reinking defeated Poulter, 2–0, and though Johns and Chalice had won both their matches, also 2–0, Chris Stelzer was handling Justice easily, having already won the first game of their best-of-three match. The outcome of the competition effectively rested on the result of the match between Robaina and Lyon. Lyon had crushed Robaina in the first game, but Robaina came back and won the second duel.

Robaina, playing a deck built around Jokulhaups, had fared poorly in the earlier rounds. "[The deck has] Reinforcements and Lodestone Bauble, but I just didn't have that many good creatures," he said. "I had a few little first strikers and little tricks that I could do, but really the creatures were kind of lax, so even if I had put out Jokulhaups and Reinforcements, I didn't have anything to put out afterwards that's really awesome, so I was just kind of slackin' all day long. I lost three of my first four rounds."



The key card in the final game, though, was Robaina's Circle of Protection: Red, which he got out early. At one point Lyon had amassed an army of red creatures but couldn't do anything with them.

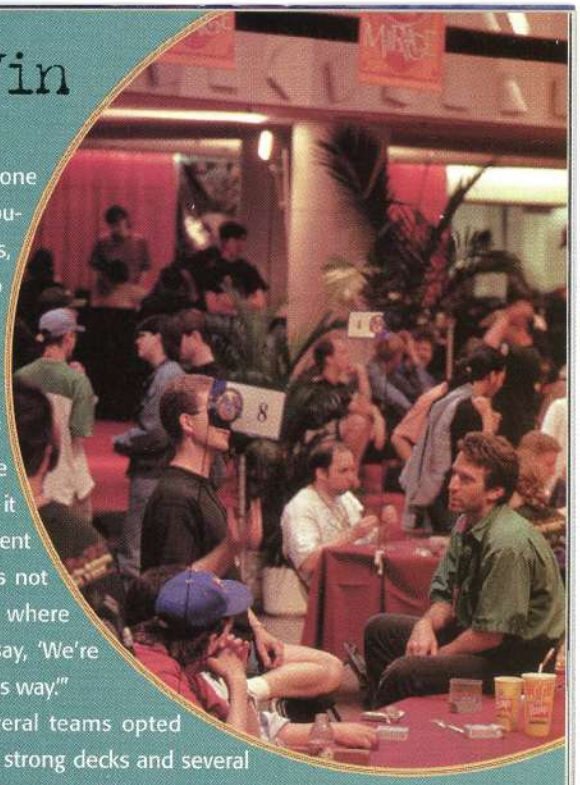
"I knew I had Jokulhaups coming and he was playing every card as it came," said Robaina. "I knew I was going to be able to blow everything up at some point and start going."

And that's just what he did. Playing Jokulhaups with Dwarven Armory out and some land in his hand, Robaina was able to attack with Sabretooth Tiger and win the deciding game without incident.

"It's nice to know I came through for the team," said Robaina. "It's nice to finally do pretty well. I think my teammates had a lot of confidence in me; it's nice to finally repay that."

For the win, PCL took home $11,000, while Team Oasis went home with $6,000. Semifinalists Team Canada and Reservoir Dogs each won $4,000.

...na Comes Through with Clutch Win



The event was the first for the "new" Pacific Coast Legends lineup. The PCL group had lost one of its cornerstone members, two-time World Championship semifinalist Henry Stern. Stern went to work for Wizards of the Coast's Research and Development department following the Magic World Championships in August. He was replaced by Johns, considered one of the top players in the L.A. area and on the Pro Tour circuit. Johns had finished in the Top 8 at the both the Long Beach and Columbus Pro Tour events, as well as at this year's World Championships.

"The obvious choice [for Stern's replacement] was the best player in Los Angeles that wasn't on our team already, which was Scott," said Robaina. "We also looked around at people outside [L.A.]; we thought about making the team more national, but in the end, we figured it was best to keep it local and that way we could meet often."

Mario Robaina

Said Johns: "I was on the verge of forming a team with Brian Weissman, John Immordino, and Matt Place, but we had a lot of communication problems. It never really came to fruition."

Johns proved to be a more-than-worthy addition, as he supplied many a notch in PCL's win column throughout the day-long team event. He was quick to deflect the credit, though. "I just happened to have that deck," he said. "There's a couple times I outsmarted my opponents maybe or got into their head, [but] the thing I enjoy about the team experience, and this event in particular, is that I was just one part of the group. I was just doing my job and everyone else was doing their job."

The first official Pro Tour team event followed the same format (different cards) used at this year's World Championships: each team (consisting of five people) was given five Ice Age starter decks and five Alliances boosters. From the cards gathered, the team then had to construct five different decks. Teams assigned each member a particular deck and then played against other teams. The number of options and number of decisions required, as well as the relative newness of the format, made for a wide variety of deck-building strategies—not to mention mistakes.

"It's a totally different format than straight Sealed," explained Robaina. "It's a lot easier to screw up. When you've got one starter and a couple of boosters, it's a lot easier to build one decent deck, but when you've got a big assortment of cards, every time you build a deck it presents a different universe. There's not some formula where you can really say, 'We're going to do it this way.'"

Whereas several teams opted to make several strong decks and several weak ones, PCL took a different approach. (For a closer look at their strategy, see "Under the Microscope," on page 36.) "Because of the way Magic is and how there's so much luck as far as drawing mana," said Robaina, "you don't want to put all your eggs into just three baskets by building three really good decks, rather than five decks that can win in any one match."

The tournament was a seven-round affair; five rounds of Swiss-style competition whittled the field of forty-eight squads down to four which then advanced to the single-elimination semifinals and finals.

At the end of the Swiss-style rounds, Team Oasis was ranked first, with a 5–0 record, while PCL had a 4–0–1 record. Team Canada was third at 4–1, while Reservoir Dogs, a team comprised of all Europeans, was fourth, also at 4–1.

In the semifinals, Team Oasis defeated Reservoir Dogs, 3–1, while the Pacific Coast Legends defeated Team Canada, 3–1. These victories set the stage for Robaina to shine during the all-important championship battle.

Third Place: Team Canada

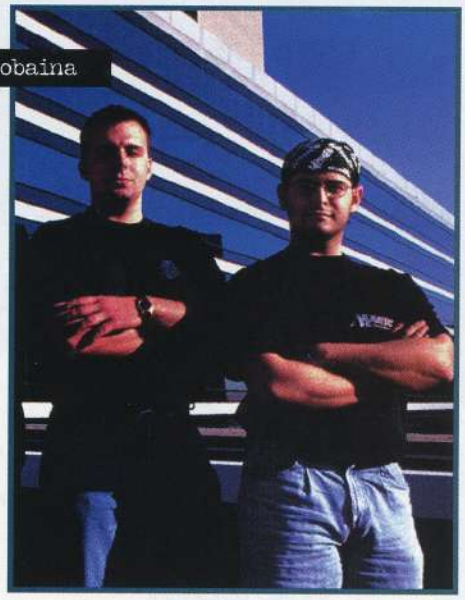
With a field of forty-seven other teams, five rounds of Swiss-style pairings, and two rounds of single-elimination play staring them in the face, the Pacific Coast Legends (Team PCL) managed to turn five decks of Ice Age and five packs of Alliances into five competitive decks, good enough to earn a $11,000 payday.

Teamwork Pays Off for PCL Five

by Lisa Stevens

Led by Mark Chalice, PCL members Mark Justice, Preston Poulter, Scott Johns, and Mario Robaina followed a concise strategy to build their decks in the allotted sixty-minute window of time. Their first decision was to try to make five competitive decks rather than four strong ones and one "sacrificial lamb." Their reasoning was simple: they needed as many chances as possible to squeak out the three wins required each round to advance. The luck of the pairings could easily dictate how well even the best deck performed.

"Because of the way the games could go, you could still get mana screwed in your good deck, so we wanted all the decks to have some balance," Johns pointed out.



Chalice and Robaina

Chalice was chosen to lead Team PCL during the deck-construction phase. The group had practiced building decks with and without Chalice guiding them, and their findings showed that having a strong leader during the deck-construction phase was critical. Team PCL planned to place the stronger decks with the "weaker" players, and give the "better" players the slightly weaker decks. This way they hoped to pull off more wins with the weaker decks.

In order to construct their decks in the allotted time, members of Team PCL had a regimented system for sorting their cards. The team's first move was to remove all the cards they weren't going to use, the cards they felt were weak. Next, they sorted the remaining cards by color and between creature and non-creature, with "creature" defined as any card that could deal damage.

"Probably the most important breakdown is to separate those two stacks [creatures and non-creatures in each color] into two further stacks of spells that cost two or more of a color and spells that cost one of a color," noted Poulter.

This ended up giving them four stacks for each color. The spells that cost two of a color signaled a heavy commitment to that particular color in that deck, while the spells that cost one of a certain color allowed them to splash that color in other decks to help strengthen those decks. By separating out the cards, Chalice hoped that his team would see the strong combinations more easily and thus give them a huge head start towards building five strong decks.

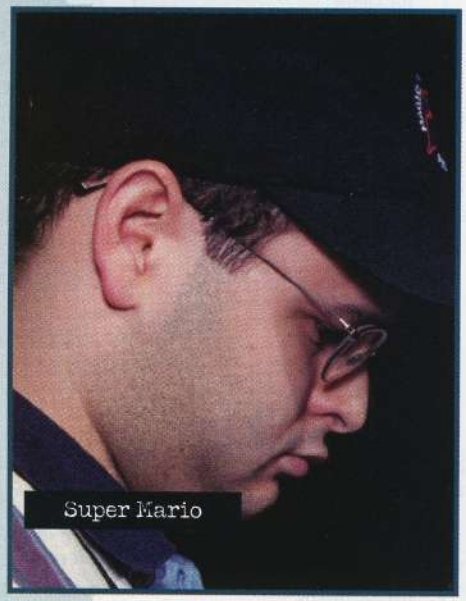
Team PCL entered the event figuring there would be certain types of decks they would be looking to build. In the Ice Age/Alliances format, for instance, Chalice noted that black/blue seems to be an extremely strong combination as well as blue/white, "cause there seems to be a significant amount of control. Green creatures also tend to make a primary focus for one of the decks."

Chalice ended up playing a black/blue/white deck with Ray of Command, three Dark Banishings, Viscerid Drone, and Merieke Ri Berit, because—as Robaina explained—"it suits his playing style. He ends up catching a lot of people off guard with vague rulings technicalities that this deck generates."



Super Mario

Poulter got the green/white deck with a lot of banding, flying, and big creatures. Justice played the red/blue deck with two Ray of Commands, Binding Grasp, Vexing Arcanix, and some counters. Johns ended up with a red/green deck with some really large green creatures and red support via direct damage. Robaina got the Jokulhaups deck with the leftover creatures, that weren't very strong: Dwarven Armory to beef the creatures up, and some direct damage with Guerrilla Tactics, Pyrokinesis, and Meteor Shower.

As it turned out, their strategy of making five comparable decks proved critical. The final results for PCL were as follows: Chalice, 6–1; Johns, 5–2; Justice, 4–1–2; Robaina, 4–3; and Poulter, 3–3–1.

One interesting side note is that Justice's two draws occurred from unfinished games, the results of his teammates having already won the particular match. In both draws, he was under severe pressure and likely would have lost. As you can see, only Chalice truly dominated his opponents. The rest of the team pulled out victories when they needed to and made up for bad matchups that were bound to happen. Team PCL won its matches by the following scores: 4–1, 3–2, 2–2–1, 3–2, 4–1, 3–1–1, and 3–1–1. They had no room for any poor deck which could lose in each round. Instead, they needed all of the decks to be capable of pulling off much-needed wins.

"We took the basic philosophy that we needed solid play, five good decks, no gimmicks, no tricks, nothing like that," explained Justice. "We knew that we were all good players, so if we built five solid decks, we would all have a chance at doing well. Our card selection was average, so we took that, and through solid deck building, we were able to use our experience to win the tournament."

Winding Down after a Professional Tournament

Sunday Night in Atlanta

Question: Where do most of the players competing in Pro Tour events go after the main event is finished and the various side events have all been played out?

Answer: To the lobby of the tournament's main hotel—in the case of Pro Tour–Atlanta, that meant the Marriot Marquis in downtown Atlanta, where players joined in a contagious night of booster drafts, sealed deck, and constructed-ante play.

Ever since Pro Tour–New York last February, the very first stop on WotC's Pro Tour schedule, Sunday nights have become the unofficial time for players of all ages to chill out and play a few games of Magic against some of the best players in the world. Players have often bumped their flights an extra day in order to hang out and relax after the long weekend of stiff competition. Sunday night in Atlanta was no exception, as players from various destinations engaged in friendly games of Magic.

Magic games of all kinds could be found taking place: John Yoo and Truc Bui, both from California, were setting up an Ice Age/Alliances starter-deck tournament after missing their flight to Los Angeles. "They thought my trophy was a bomb," said Yoo, who was a Master-division semifinalist in Atlanta. "They wouldn't let me open the box [that the trophy was in] because they thought I might detonate something. It cost us half an hour, and we missed our scheduled flight!"

Meanwhile, U.S. National Champion Dennis Bentley, of Rochester, New York, was beaming ear to ear. "I've won enough to cover my trip," said Bentley, who mentioned that he and Pro Tour–Long Beach champion Shawn "Hammer" Regnier had just beaten Canadian soulmates Paul McCabe and Terry Borer in a sealed-deck match. The stakes were high: an Unlimited Black Lotus and a Mox Pearl, ante rarely seen in today's game.

At the other end of the lobby, 1995 Canadian National Champion Eric Tam was discussing Mirage strategy with this year's Worlds Finalist Mark Justice, while trying to figure out how his half of a Pearl got put up for ante while he was away at dinner. Hmm....

David Dittmer, of Acton, Massachusetts, enjoyed several quality Ice Age/Alliances constructed games against yours truly and Aaron Muranaka of Layton, Utah, another Master-division semifinalist in Atlanta. Said Dittmer, "This is the best way to get prepared for the next Qualifier."

One particular player, Nate Clarke, of Londonderry, New Hampshire, flew into Atlanta just to play against some of the top-ranked players in side games. A win in sealed deck against New Jersey's Jon Finkel and two more victories against Mark Justice highlighted his weekend. "I underestimated him, and he made me pay for it," said Justice.

As the players entered the wee hours of the morning, Michael Elkaim, from Brussels, Belgium, and Matthew Perez of Seattle were waging a hard-fought duel to see who would play the sleeping Arko Toikka, of Helsinki, Finland, for a pile of cards including Italian Legends and a number of the new Mirage cards.

Elkaim probably summed up things best when he replied that the "people" were what made this night special for him. "Rarely do I get to see this many people playing the game of Magic and really enjoying it. And the level that the players play at, that's what makes this whole Pro Tour circuit great. I just hope I can qualify for Dallas."

Age Poses no Barrier for Alexander Sutherland

by Beth Moursund

Twelve-year-old Alex Sutherland of Concord, Massachusetts, was not just the youngest player ever to reach the quarterfinals of any Pro Tour event; he's one of the youngest participants to compete in WotC's Pro Tour circuit, period. Pro Tour–Atlanta was actually the second professional tournament for Sutherland, who also competed in Columbus, Ohio, last July, placing twenty-first overall in the Junior division.

"I got better luck this time around," Sutherland commented. "Last time I played Paul McCabe in the first round and Terry Borer in the second round." Canada's McCabe and Borer wound up being the Junior finalists at Pro Tour–Columbus. But Sutherland can hold his own against older players, too: he played in one of the 1996 regionals but finished thirty-third, just missing the cutoff for advancing after losing to Pro Tour–Long Beach finalist Tom Guevin of Nashua, New Hampshire.

Sutherland discovered Magic in late 1994. "I went to school one day in fifth grade, and my friend came in and told me there was this really cool game he'd started playing. He let me borrow some of his cards, and we played," he said.

Sutherland eventually taught his father (who competed in the Master division at Atlanta) to play Magic as well. He says that not many of his classmates at the Fenn School (a private school in Concord) play, however. "People think it's stupid to play Magic at my school. I don't know why." Still, Sutherland is in no danger of running out of things to do with his friends; he plays various sports, including tennis, soccer, and basketball.

More than anything, Sutherland is looking forward to Pro Tour–Dallas this month. "I play Type II [Standard] far more often than I play Sealed Deck [Limited Environment]. I'm more confident when I play Type II. There's a lot less luck to it. There's a lot less pressure in Sealed Deck, though. Like, half of it's up to the cards [you get]."

He thinks the addition of Mirage will make the playing environment much more interesting, though he does have a few reservations. "I was really happy when they decided they were going to restrict Hymn [to Tourach], because a Necrodeck makes so many other interesting types of decks nonviable. I'm kind of disappointed that they put Stupor in.... You're going to be seeing Stupor more than you see Hymn because it's only one black in the casting cost."

He might be just be a kid, but Alex Sutherland has already shown he can compete with the best of 'em.

PREPPING FOR THE BIG TIME

Junior Competitors Reach for Higher Education

For 18-year-old Aaron Souders, winning the 1996 Junior division in Atlanta was, as he put it, a "godsend." Originally from Elburn, Illinois, Souders left home to attend Eureka College in Eureka, Illinois, and is now in his sophomore year. He traveled all the way to Atlanta to compete in the Junior division and won $8,400 in scholarship money for his trouble.

"I really didn't think I was going to be able to go to college next year, and now I can," Souders said between grins and nods at the passing players who were congratulating him. "I think the scholarship money is going to keep me in for four years."

Such heart-felt elation from Souders can't help but make Wizards of the Coast personnel feel all warm and fuzzy inside. The company is giving away a total of $170,000 in scholarship money in 1997 alone—that's $30,000 for each of the four stops on the Pro Tour schedule and $50,000 for the Junior Championship. Souders claims that for him, Magic has always been "fun" and "a boredom killer," but now, it seems, the game has crossed into the realm of education. Who'd of thunk it?

Well, Kärin Kriznik, director of Event Management at WotC, for one. She, along with game designer Skaff Elias and Events Coordinator (now Arena League Director) Rob Voce, were instrumental in the early decision that Junior competitors be paid in scholarship money. Says Kriznik, "The cost for college is a tremendous burden for most young people. Paying students in scholarship guarantees funds will be available for their education."

And WotC is definitely committed to furthering the education of young Magic players. Magic, after all, is an intellectual game, so it makes sense that it should encourage intellectual pursuits. Eighteen-year-old Brian Wilson of Seattle, who won $3,000 in scholarship money at Pro Tour–Long Beach, put it nicely when he said, "Magic makes you think a lot. You have to be really sharp... I think it actually prepares you for college." Indeed, and in more ways than one.

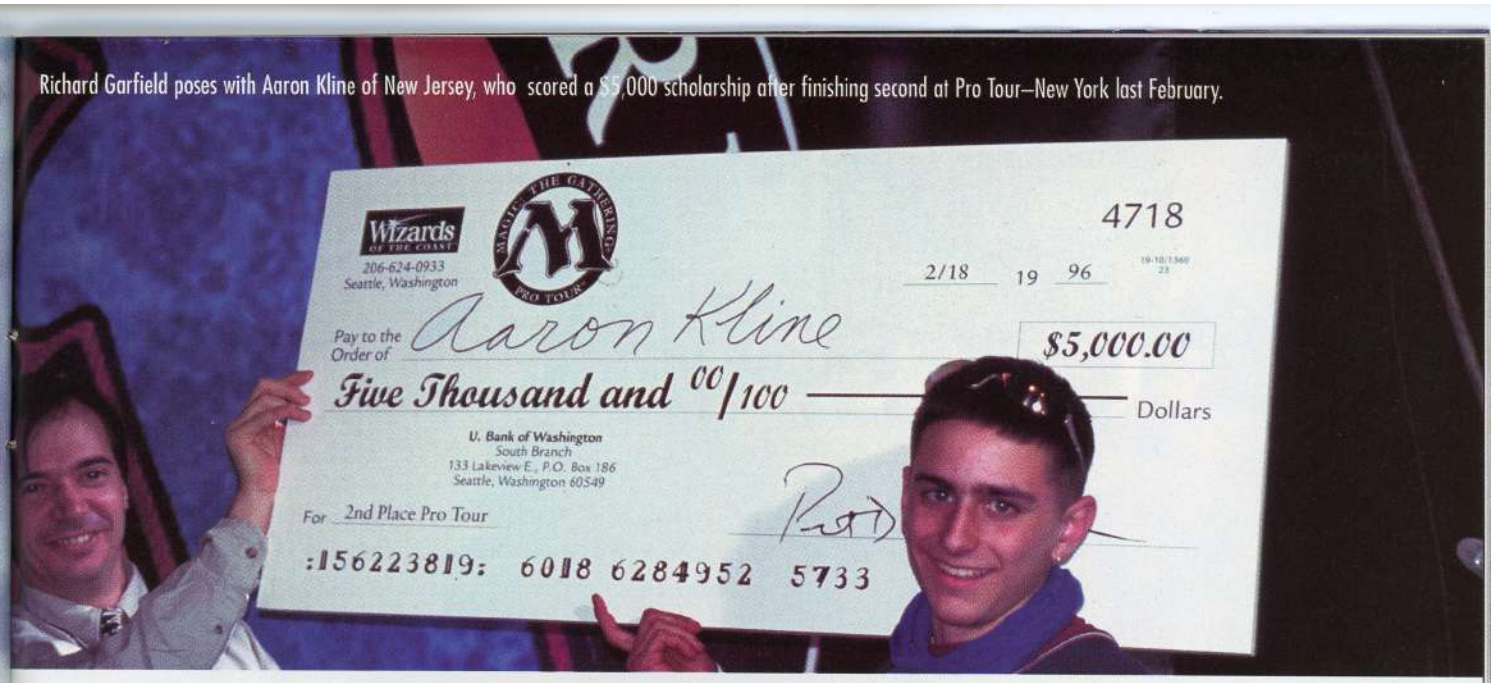
So why pay Junior winners in scholarship money instead of cash? Well, besides that whole encouragement-of-higher-education thing, scholarship winners are not responsible for the 30 percent tax that's required on other prize money. Explains Kriznik, "I think most of them would rather have the money paid toward books and tuition than taxes."

Nineteen-year-old Terry Borer, from North York, Toronto, competed in the Master division (and made it to the quarterfinal round) in Atlanta, but came in first place in the Junior division at Pro Tour–Columbus in July. Of his $8,400 scholarship winnings from the summer event, he uses about $2,800 a year for tuition at the University of Toronto and projects that the prize money will last him for three years' tuition. "Scholarship money kind of appeases the parents a bit," he says. "I don't know if you really want to give a fifteen-year-old kid thousands and thousands of dollars."

Fifteen-year-old Louis Beryl and sixteen-year-old David Parker might disagree with that philosophy, however. Beryl hails from Palm Beach Gardens, Florida, and finished in second place in the Junior division at Atlanta for a scholarship prize of $5,000. As yet, he still has two years of high school to complete and hasn't decided on a college or a major. But judging from the way Beryl is playing, he just may have enough scholarship money to pay for all of his tuition by the time he's ready to use it.

Parker, of Rochester, New York, won $2,900 in Columbus and notes that he'd prefer cash winnings. "If they gave me normal money, I'd probably just buy a car 'cause I just got my license." Perhaps he'll get that car anyway and be glad in a few years that he has part of his college tuition paid upfront.

Souders was all smiles after taking the Junior title in Atlanta.



Richard Garfield poses with Aaron Kline of New Jersey, who scored a $5,000 scholarship after finishing second at Pro Tour–New York last February.

Max Szlagor, the eighteen-year-old Junior champion at Pro Tour–Long Beach, like Souders, won $8,400. Currently, he's attending a community college near his home in Shaumburg, Illinois, and plans to transfer to the University of Illinois. Though Szlagor admits he's an entrepreneur (he's majoring in business), his enjoyment of Magic doesn't just spring from potential prize money. "Magic's really brought me a lot of good friendships; that's one of the best things about it."

Other Junior winners seem to agree with Szlagor. Winner of $2,900 from the Junior competition in Columbus, eighteen-year-old Jon Finkel of Fanwood, New Jersey, is now attending Rutgers University and claims that he met most of his friends through playing Magic. Likewise, Paul McCabe of Toronto, Canada, whose total scholarship winnings are the largest in the Pro Tour so far–$10,500–says that besides money, Magic has brought him "the opportunity to go to a lot of neat places and to meet a lot of interesting people." Of course, McCabe started playing Magic with two of his high school friends, Eric Tam and Terry Borer, both of whom share in the Pro Tour experience.

Magic seems to be a sharing kind of experience all around, and WotC is proud to be able to take part in that. "I'm truly happy to be able to make a difference is someone's education," said Kriznik of Aaron Souders's scholarship winnings. And Souders is not only helping to further his education through Magic, but also plans to educate others. He's majoring in Elementary Education at Eureka and wants to teach kindergarten when he graduates.

Will he be teaching his students to play Magic? Well, if we ever see a five-year-old competing on the Pro Tour, we just may find out the answer.

Whispers from the Stromgald Spy

by Lisa Stevens

The Stromgald Spy was slinking around the Atlanta Apparel Mart during the recent Pro Tour event and overheard all sorts of interesting tidbits she'd like to pass your way.

Perhaps the funniest episode took place when Mark Chalice was trying to get Pacific Coast Legends teammate Mark Justice to go to bed the night before the all-important team tournament. It appears Acclaim might be offering Team PCL $100,000 worth of sponsorship money for the upcoming season. Chalice challenged Justice to a Mirage Solomon Draft, with the winner taking all the cards, forty green points, and, provided Chalice won, Justice would go to bed. If Justice won, however, he could stay up all night. Justice prevailed 2–1.

Electronics Boutique (EB) sponsored a squad for the team competition in Atlanta. Team Entropy—consisting of Rick Vasquez, Bin Chen, Jay Luo, David Leader, and Daniel Redys—did well, almost pulling off an upset against Team PCL, before Preston Poulter drew the land he needed to Hurricane his opponent to death. Rumor has it that EB is looking to sponsor three teams for Dallas.

Neutral Ground was trying to collect $1,000 in donations to bet in a grudge match between Stephen O'Mahoney-Schwartz and Nate "the self-proclaimed best player in the world" Clark. It seems that Clark has been trashing Pro Tour players (primarily on the Internet), and especially Neutral Ground players, with his posts to the Magic strategy lists. The bet would pit Clark against O'Mahoney-Schwartz in a best-of-five games Sealed-Deck match. If Clark wins, he gets $1,000, but if O'Mahoney-Schwartz comes out on top, then Clark is forbidden to make another post to the strategy lists. The grudge match should play itself out in Dallas (November 22–24).

We managed to catch up with reigning Magic World Champion Tom Chanpheng at the Atlanta event, where he was being sponsored by Ultra•Pro Australia. Chanpheng mentioned that he's been getting all sorts of queries from people interested in acquiring his one-of-a-kind Magic card, including a rumored $10,000 offer on the Internet from a die-hard Christopher Rush fan. Rush was the artist who painted the illustration for Chanpheng's card. The world champ wants to make it clear that the card is not for sale.

Meanwhile, Mark Justice will be launching a personal "Road to the World Championships" tour in Dallas. While there are no announced sponsors for the tour just yet, Justice did say that a couple are "in the works." His rationale is that since he lost to Switzerland's Alexander Blumke in the semifinals of the 1995 Worlds, and this year lost in the championship finals to Chanpheng, that 1997 is the year for Justice. The tour will make stops at all Pro Tour events, in addition to hitting many of the top conventions. Justice will stage some type of challenge where opponents have to beat him in a number of different formats for thousands of dollars in prizes. Rumor has it that one of the potential prizes could be Justice's game and card store in Salt Lake City, Utah.

• A beta tournament was organized by the players on Saturday evening. Eight top players paid $100 each to enter the tournament, which featured the likes of Shawn "Hammer" Regnier, Mark Chalice, Mark Rosewater, and Mario Robaina. However, in the end, Seattle's own Matt Hyra outlasted everyone. Congratulations!

• The most impressive move at the Atlanta event came from Mark Chalice. Here was the scenario: Chalice had Viscerid Drone on the board and not much in his hand, while his opponent was sporting Abyssal Specter and Shambling Strider on the board. Things looked bleak until Chalice pulled out his Ray of Command. He cast it on his opponent's Specter, attacked for 2 damage, forced his opponent to discard a card, and then sacked the Specter to the Drone to bury the Strider. This completely turned the game around and Chalice pulled out the victory.

• U.S. National Champion Dennis Bentley's practice group got ready for the Mirage Sealed-Deck tournament by playing with cards from Fourth Edition, but cards that normally have banding were deemed to have flanking, and those with trample had phasing.

Dallas is fast approaching (just two weeks away!), with a new restriction for Standard (Type II), Mirage cards legal for sanctioned play, and a high-profile Classic (Type I) tournament on the agenda. Players are speculating on how Mirage and the new restrictions will affect the Standard tournament format. The Stromgald Spy will be there to bring you all the latest news. See y'all in Big D.

Arena League News

Summer Season Scoop

At the time this article was written, the Summer Season of Arena had only recently drawn to a close. Over 3,000 players at nearly 200 stores participated in the league, and competition was fierce for the top spots at each store.

Three players distinguished themselves with their strong league play. Each one accumulated an Arena player rating of over 1900, placing them at the exalted rank of Lord Magus of Arena. These players were Patrick Henderson of Aptos, California (who finished with a rating of 1962), Robert Shaffer of Tinley Park, Illinois (final rating 1951), and Jim Lemire of Southboro, Massachusetts (final rating 1921). Congratulations to these three individuals; time will tell if they can continue their success or if the hordes of hungry Masters, Journeymen, and Initiates below them will dethrone the newly crowned Lord Magi.

Three Magic Pro Tour Qualifiers were held at the end of the Summer Season exclusively for Arena participants. These tournaments were held in Los Angeles, Boston, and New York City as yet another way of rewarding Arena players for their participation in the league. The three top individuals who won invitations (and plane fare) to Pro Tour–Dallas were Steve Hirsch (City of Angels), Jim Lemire (Beantown), and Igor Frayman (The Big Apple). Arena and Wizards of the Coast congratulate these three players, and wish them luck in the Pro Tour!

Harvest Season Info

The Harvest Season opened on September 20, with nearly 400 stores and 8,000 players. Four more Arena Pro Tour Qualifiers were scheduled at the end of this season; results for the season, as well as these tournaments, were unavailable at press time.

Autumn Season Update

On November 8, Arena began its third season in over forty metropolitan areas across the nation. This season features an exciting limited-environment format called Continuous Draft. This format tests players' deck-building skills as it requires them to build a new deck from a limited pool of cards before each match.

In Continuous-Draft play, players begin with a set number of starter deck(s) and/or booster pack(s) as determined at the beginning of play. For the Autumn Season of Arena, each player must purchase three booster packs of any combination of Fourth Edition and/or Ice Age. In other words, players may choose three packs of Fourth Edition, three packs of Ice Age, or two packs from one set and one pack from the other.

Before the first draft only, each player may be required by the rules to remove a number of cards from play before proceeding. This is the only time a player may remove cards from play. For the Autumn Season, each player must remove one card before the first match. This card will never be included in future drafts; it is for you, the player, to keep as your own.

You may have played some form of Continuous Draft before; make sure you familiarize yourself with Arena's version of this play type before playing your first match. Issue #13 of The Duelist details how Continuous Draft works in Arena; players can find additional information in the Arena Floor Rules, the Player's Guide to Arena (available at your local store when you register for Arena), or on Arena's website <http://www.wizards.com/Arena>.

Arena Ratings System Information

We've heard a lot of questions from Arena players about how they can improve their rating. The answer seems simple at first–win more matches–but that doesn't fully answer the question.

To improve your rating quickly, you should defeat higher-rated players. The higher the rating of your opponent, the more points you can win by defeating them (and the fewer points you will lose by losing the match). Players who "pile up" victories over low-rated players will find that their rating rises relatively slowly, and a single loss to a lower-rated player can undo several victories. Thus, players who are concerned with their rating should seek out opponents of equal or greater skill level in order to maximize their rating improvement.

On the other hand, less experienced players are reminded that they, like any Arena player, need not play anyone against their will. One nice feature of Arena is that it allows players to compete against any opponent–there are no rounds or seeding in the league. Players who feel uncomfortable competing against the top players in their area are advised to seek players of similar skill levels to their own in order to build their Magic expertise.

OFFICIAL NEWS CONCERNING THE DCI

DCI UPDATE

COMPILED BY JASON CARL

The Duelists' Convocation International officially announces the departure of Fallen Empires and Ice Age from the Standard (Type II) tournament environment. Cards from these sets will no longer be permitted in sanctioned Standard tournaments starting January 1, 1997.

The DCI will continue to sanction the following tournament formats after January 1, 1997, but will calculate the results in the appropriate ratings category:

Ice Age Constructed	Classic (Type I)
Ice Age Sealed Deck	Limited
Ice Age/Alliances Constructed	Classic (Type I)
Ice Age/Alliances Sealed Deck	Limited

Official Changes in Standard (Type II) Deck Construction

Effective January 1, 1997

The DCI has reached a decision to change the format of the Standard environment, beginning on January 1, 1997. Previously, the environment was defined as the largest set of currently available cards. This policy created quite a large tournament environment! However, because of inconsistencies in print-run sizes, expansions sometimes remained in the environment longer than we anticipated, and some sets were in danger of leaving the environment before competitors had a chance to fully explore their cards' capabilities.

In order to regulate these factors in the face of inconsistent availability of expansions, the DCI is changing the composition of the Standard environment to one wherein the basic sets and stand-alone expansions will replace old versions of each other as the new version is released, and limited-edition expansions will be replaced by the next limited-edition expansion a year later. Card sets should enter the environment as another set leaves, keeping Standard tournaments fresh, challenging, and exciting over time. The DCI believes this will also enable competitors to more easily predict which card sets are permitted in Standard tournament play at any given time.

The DCI has previously promised ninety days notice prior to removing any card set from the Standard environment; since the new policy is not effective until January 1, 1997, the DCI is notifying members at this time that Fallen Empires and Ice Age will be leaving the Standard environment in January 1997.

The following Standard Floor Rules will therefore read as follows on January 1, 1997:

2.3 Standard (Type II) Deck Construction

Standard tournament decks may consist of cards from Magic: The Gathering, as well as any current extensions of the basic set, all current limited-edition expansion sets, and all current stand-alone expansion sets. Players may also include cards from previous printings that appear in the most current edition as long as they do not have features that create "marked" cards, such as cards with corners that are rounder than other cards.

The DCI uses the following policy to determine the composition of the Standard environment:

- New editions of the basic set replace old versions and are permitted in Standard play thirty days after the release date of the new edition.
- New stand-alone expansions (e.g., Ice Age, Mirage) replace previous stand-alone expansions and are permitted in Standard play thirty days after the release date of the new edition.
- Limited-edition expansions are replaced thirty days after the release date of the next limited-edition expansion, which has a release date of more than ten months later than the release date of the outgoing limited-edition expansion.

Card set:	Replaced by:	When is it replaced?
Basic set	New edition of basic set	Thirty days after release date of new basic set
Stand-alone	New stand-alone	Thirty days after release date of new stand-alone
Limited-ed. expansion	New limited-edition expansion which has a release date of more than 10 months after the outgoing limited-edition expansion's release date	Thirty days release date of new limited-edition expansion

Example of new policy: When Fallen Empires and Ice Age leave the Standard tournament environment on January 1, 1997, the card sets permitted in this format will be as follows: Fourth Edition (basic set), Chronicles (extension of the basic set), Mirage (stand-alone expansion), Alliances (limited-edition expansion), and Homelands (limited-edition expansion).

The next card set scheduled for release is Visions, due for release in January or February 1997. When Visions is released, it will replace Homelands in the Standard environment.

Fifth Edition Rules

Effective November 8, 1996

The Magic: The Gathering—Fifth Edition rules will be effective at all DCI-sanctioned tournaments as of November 8, 1996. The new rules may be found in all Mirage starter decks and in issue #13 of The Duelist.

Standard Floor Rules Additions

Effective November 1, 1996

On November 1, 1996, the following sections of the DCI Standard Floor Rules for Magic: The Gathering will be amended to read as follows:

1.1a All consequences resulting from violations of DCI Standard Floor Rules that come to the attention of the judge MUST be enforced. Competitors are not permitted to waive penalties on behalf of their opponents.

1.1b Regardless of the wishes of the competitors involved, judges must correct any rules mistake (whether from the Standard Floor Rules or from the rules for Magic: The Gathering) they notice or that is brought to their attention, and must ensure that the appropriate consequences are applied.

1.2.1a Prior to each duel, competitors must complete all sideboarding decisions, deck shuffling, and shuffling of their opponent's deck within five minutes. Violation of this rule may be considered stalling, and therefore may result in a warning or disqualification from current competition at the discretion of the judge. The judge and/or Tournament Organizer may choose to set a time limit for these procedures of less than five minutes. This time limit must be adequately advertised and announced prior to the tournament.
